

Speaker 1 [00:00:40] Hum. Listen, how would you like us to name your partner, girlfriend, spouse, or partner? Is there a specific term for your partner that suits you? How long have you been with this person? With your partner?

Speaker 2 [00:00:58] Well, we got together in [Month, Year] and married in [Month Year].

Speaker 1 [00:01:05] Alright. Listen, first of all, I just want you to talk about your love story that you are currently living with your partner. In general terms.

Speaker 2 [00:01:22] It's broad. What I can say is that we had a little girl [1-5 years] ago. So it's difficult to talk about our relationship from the beginning; many things have evolved. It's really a relationship that has been built and continues to be built. This event has changed many things and has redefined the couple, what we expect from each other, especially in terms of support and listening, moving forward together as a family. These are recent things that have been redefined, and I think that's how I would describe my couple. It's that it is always being constructed with the different life events we experience. It is always evolving, always new in its way, and it is very enriching and fulfilling.

Speaker 1 [00:02:48] So you told me it's been a bit more than since [Year], is that what you said ...[Year]. In [Year], so it's been about [6-10] years, roughly [6-10] years. Soon [10-15] years. Maybe you can tell me a little bit about how you met?

Speaker 2 [00:03:05] Yes, yes, yes, we met at work. In fact, we met at the [University]; I was a researcher there in [field], and she joined the [University] in [Year]. So we met because we were in two [field] labs, so sometimes we had to collaborate, especially to discuss at that time. Right away, I really liked her a lot. I was single at the time, and she had been in a relationship for a while. With a woman too. And well, we started spending time together, having drinks, going to concerts. But it really touched me a lot. I went for it and took my chance; it took a lot of time because it was complicated for her to leave her relationship, even though it wasn't going well. She couldn't see herself ending everything overnight; psychologically, she couldn't imagine leaving someone for another. She was really struggling with this situation, so it took her time to realize her relationship wasn't working and that she might have a possible future with me. And maybe there was happiness to be found in that. So actually, we really met in [Year] but got together in [Month] [Year] when she finally ended her relationship and was psychologically ready to be with me. And I don't remember what the question was.

Speaker 1 [00:04:53] No, it's not really questions, it's more conversations because what interests me is your experience and your opinion. It was simply about the conditions of the meeting. How did you meet? So you told me you met in [Year], you got together in [Year]. You told me she was with someone before, with whom things were not going well. She had a hard time leaving that person for you who might have been something else to live. Can you tell us a bit about what happened after you formalized it, so to speak, when the decision was made? How was that decision made?

Speaker 2 [00:05:35] Well, I was there, waiting for her. In pain, I must say. But it wasn't easy for me to be next to her and think that this relationship might not be possible. But once she came back and said it's good, I'm available, things moved pretty quickly. I would say we were always very close, really friends. And what's still present today is that we are really great friends. There is sharing, connection, complicity, humor, so much laughter between us. That's always been there, and things happened quite simply. And I would say life made us move forward quickly since she found herself in financial difficulties quite soon after we started seeing each other because she lost her research contract. So she was in [City] with rent to pay and found herself unemployed. Except before the jokes of [Employee Center], at the time, a law had passed, and actually, you had to exhaust your remaining rights before acquiring new ones, and her remaining rights corresponded to not even a minimum wage from a student job years ago. So no more rent money, even needing to ask for food aid, a disaster. So I suggested we move in together to avoid rent payments, and since it was something I wanted to experience with her one day, we went for it. I left my apartment, packed my things, and moved in with her. And we started living like that together. After a year, we were in [City], and after a year, we wanted to move, leave [City] for [City] for a better living environment. So we got our first apartment together. At that time, we traveled a lot and shared many things around traveling. But another event that began to change us was like a first child. In [Year], we returned from the [Country], and actually, we were a bit down because it was such a strong experience, and we found ourselves in [Month] in [City], a bit depressed. My partner is very close to animals; she loves them, always wanted a pet, had many when she was young. I didn't care much, but she really wanted a dog. And we got a little dog then, which already changed our daily lives significantly, being in an apartment, having to potty train it, get up at 5 AM to walk it. And then, in the education process, we already lived through a lot of adjustments. So, a first thing that already marked our relationship, and then we continued building through life events, wanting to have a real child afterward. However, our journey was complicated since at the time, the [Office] law hadn't passed. We started the process in [Year], approached a [Office] center in [Country]. I went through several psychological interviews to determine if we had the right to access [Office]. These were events where we thought, you better have a good relationship because otherwise, everything could fall apart. It was tough, very long, but it also solidified us. It only confirmed that we were living this life together and were going far together. It was very long. After our first attempt, we tried for [1-5] years with six attempts, marked by a Covid pause for a year. We experienced that period very well, confining just the two of us, without anything else to manage. Even now, we sometimes wish for another small confinement period to feel good again. The last attempt in [Month] [Year] succeeded. It was another major turning point and step in our couple's life. Our little one was born in [Month] [Year]. The first [1-4] months were intense. We didn't know what was happening, we didn't sleep, we didn't know what to do. We were discovering a whole new life. So again, it was a time to rediscover the importance of each other and what we are together. It's been a year, and it's still very challenging, but she is so happy. After everything we've been through, we always find a way to adapt and be flexible, to find something positive. Even the trips to [Country], staying a week there, waiting for the right moment, we always manage to make it enjoyable. [City] became our friend, and we can turn things into something fulfilling. Now, seeing how tough it is between work and the little one, everything is not easy. But we are very supportive of each other, listening to each other, and we never feel alone. That's a big summary of [6-10] years of life.

Speaker 1 [00:13:31] At the beginning of the interview, you talked about reconstruction, saying that your relationship with your partner was in constant reconstruction. Can you tell me more about what you mean by that term?

Speaker 2 [00:13:47] I find it's a personal reconstruction, meaning I feel like I'm in perpetual development or growth. I wouldn't say I have psychological difficulties, but I know my limits, things that can be difficult for me, ways of reacting that are not always adapted. My relationship allows me to grow regarding that, to be more at peace, to be less in my bad habits. There's also personal reconstruction for my wife. I see her changing a lot since we've been together. She has also evolved a lot. She didn't have an easy life, had many anxieties, anxiety. She didn't have an easy childhood, and I see her working on herself. Our relationship allows us to reconstruct individually. Also, as a couple, through life events, our couple's functioning evolves and reconstructs. I don't know exactly how to describe it, but it's perpetual evolution. Yes, in a positive direction.

Speaker 1 [00:15:48] You mentioned being supportive, a personal reconstruction that helps address your flaws and her anxiety. You could say, for example, that it's a relationship that helps regulate you daily and in general, something that resonates with you?

Speaker 2 [00:16:12] Yes, absolutely. Yes, really to regulate stress and emotions. Yes, how to react to things, having more possible responses to difficult situations. That's why I talked about flexibility. I feel less stuck in a systematic way of functioning when you don't have flexibility. It gives you more room to...

Speaker 1 [00:16:54] Yeah, yeah, more choices.

Speaker 1 [00:16:57] Choices to be yourself. Are those choices to be yourself or something else?

Speaker 2 [00:17:06] Yes, yes, but that's what this relationship brings me too. However, for me, it's difficult to consider myself, to take care of myself. But my wife reflects very positive things about me, helping me take care of myself. I forgot the beginning because your intervention resonated a lot. You told me things, but...

Speaker 1 [00:17:48] I talked about space and being oneself.

Speaker 2 [00:17:54] It allows me to be myself. It's difficult for me to do things for myself, always putting others first. But this couple, my wife, allows that because she reflects something much more positive about me. She tells me I have value, that I'm a good person, helping me consider myself more in the balance, even if it's not evident for me and I tend to put myself second.

Speaker 1 [00:18:50] You talk about choices, space to be yourself, not just metaphorically but in the relationship too. Taking your place in the relationship and with others in general.

Speaker 2 [00:19:07] Yeah, it's a transformation. I didn't take my place at all, followed, suffered in my family, at work, everywhere, without a voice. Today, at work, I can assert myself, explain my point of view, defend my arguments, take a stand. With my parental family, it's more complicated, but I'm more able. The relationships in my family are pathological; when I take my place, I'm ejected. So with my family, it hasn't improved, but I'm in my place and who I am. This relationship allowed that. Working on oneself sometimes has negative consequences, but I am much more connected to who I am, what I want to be, what I defend. After all, there is no place in my family. It's like that. But it had repercussions on my daily life, and I feel in my place in my couple. My wife reminds me when I don't take my place, needing me with my values and positions. It's supportive, reminding me of my importance.

Speaker 1 [00:21:40] Yes, she says she needs you fully. I noticed earlier you used "tu" instead of "vous." If you prefer, we can use "tu."

Speaker 2 [00:21:52] It doesn't matter; I might switch to "tu" naturally.

Speaker 1 [00:21:58] It doesn't bother me. Do you prefer "vous" or "tu"?

Speaker 2 [00:22:00] No, "tu" is fine.

Speaker 1 [00:22:03] Whatever is more comfortable for you, that's fine with me. Great. We talked about your relationship with your wife. I'd like to know if you had to compare your relationship quality with that of your friends, what would you say?

Speaker 2 [00:22:25] We often do that, especially since we had a child and saw our friends having children too. I find we are really there for each other. Being there for each other is not just supporting and listening, but also saying I need you and pushing each other to do beneficial things. I believe we are present for each other, maybe too much sometimes. With the child, friends told us to take turns. But if I hear my child cry, even if I'm not in the same room, I wake up. If I hear my wife struggling with the child, I won't let her struggle because it's my rest night. Some couples do that, but it seems impossible for us. Sometimes we are too much there for each other, never conserving energy, but we know the other is there. I find other couples live beside each other, not together. Their exchanges, respect, and valorization shock me. Some couples put each other down, and I find it violent. We don't do that. We enjoy being together and sharing things. Some couples need to escape alone to reconnect to something, but I don't feel the need to do anything without my wife or child. I want to share moments with them.

Speaker 2 [00:25:31] So you feel some friends' couples are quite separated, while you are more united. If you had to compare with previous relationships, what would you say?

Speaker 2 [00:26:03] With previous relationships, I didn't feel valued or seen as someone with qualities. My current relationship is different, feeling more valued. In past relationships, I wasn't supportive or valorizing either. It's natural with my wife; I see her strengths and weaknesses as unique. I feel good in my head and body, which wasn't the case before. Past partners accepted me as I was, without trying to help me change for the better. Now, my wife helps me be better, moving forward together.

Speaker 1 [00:28:28] An involvement from her to bring out the best in you?

Speaker 2 [00:28:34] Exactly.

Speaker 1 [00:28:41] I'd like you to talk about what a high-quality relationship is for you.

Speaker 2 [00:28:49] Mine.

Speaker 1 [00:28:53] How would you describe it?

Speaker 2 [00:29:02] Listening without judgment is very important. My wife appreciates that I listen without judgment, just being open to what she needs to express. It's crucial. Support is being present, noticing when the other is not well without them having to say it, and being available. What's magical about our relationship is the humor. We laugh so much, thinking why others aren't like this. Humor and laughter are essential, making it a high-quality relationship.

Speaker 1 [00:30:47] Yes, you talk about humor. I imagine it's linked to what you said earlier about your wife being your friend. You've mentioned communication and listening. How do you know you're in a caring relationship?

Speaker 2 [00:31:26] In everyday behaviors, noticing when the other is not well and putting everything on hold to listen. For example, if my wife comes home from work and I see she is not well, I put everything on pause to sit beside her and listen. It's not about solving the problem but just being there. Recently, my wife has been struggling with her job. I told her she doesn't have to go back if she can't. Her well-being is more important than anything else. That's being caring. On the other hand, I struggle with taking care of myself and making medical appointments. Recently, my wife took the initiative to make an appointment for me. It's about being flexible and noticing the other's needs and acting before it's too much.

Speaker 1 [00:34:38] So, for you, being caring is considering the other, noticing what they do and feel, and being available. When would you say your relationship has been the most caring?

Speaker 2 [00:35:17] There's no specific time. It's always and constantly evolving. Life events disrupt things, and sometimes one is in a difficult period, and the other supports more. I can't pinpoint a time when I've been the most caring. I hope to be regularly caring. Sometimes, unfortunately, I'm less caring when I'm not well or preoccupied. When I started my new job post-Covid, I was less available, but my wife was more caring. Recently, she has been less available because of other preoccupations but still does small caring gestures. We don't have the same way of being caring. We know what works for the other.

Speaker 1 [00:37:45] You mentioned you don't have the same way of being caring towards each other.

Speaker 2 [00:37:49] Yes, because we have different needs. My wife needs more listening than I do; it's vital for her. I need more help with tasks and small gifts, which work very well for us. So, we don't care in the same way because our needs are different.

Speaker 1 [00:39:09] You also mentioned the importance of listening. How do you know you're in a relationship where listening is present?

Speaker 2 [00:39:25] By the time spent exchanging. For example, I see many couples who don't seem to see each other. It's challenging to find time to exchange when you have a child, but it's essential to prioritize your partner. You know you're in a relationship of listening when you feel supported and heard. Just talking isn't enough if you don't feel heard and supported.

Speaker 1 [00:40:21] You say to know you're in a listening relationship, you need to feel heard. It's the feedback from the interaction. Earlier, you also mentioned humor. Can you elaborate on how it fits in?

Speaker 2 [00:41:12] It can be anything, wordplay, or silly things that make us laugh. It's quite natural. There's not a day without laughter. Even through texts, we share funny moments. Humor helps us manage ridiculous or embarrassing moments, fatigue, and interactions. It allows us to take a step back and see the funny side of situations, maintaining a childlike perspective on things. It's quite natural and connects us. Before meeting her, I didn't feel I made people laugh, but with her, I'm very funny.

Speaker 1 [00:43:24] So, humor fosters complicity and connection, like taking time together, as you described earlier. This sense of connection.

Speaker 2 [00:43:41] Yes, connection, taking time, and it's part of feeling heard. To laugh at a situation, you need to have listened well.

Speaker 1 [00:44:01] Indeed. You talked about what makes a high-quality relationship. Now, please describe a low-quality relationship.

Speaker 2 [00:44:18] I think to describe a low-quality relationship, one must reflect on how they feel individually in it. It's the opposite of what I described. In a low-quality relationship, I would feel ordinary, not knowing who I am or my strengths. It could make me question myself, lose direction, and not feel valued or respected. It's feeling alone, judged, and potentially abused, not necessarily physically but emotionally.

Speaker 1 [00:45:58] So, feeling violated by the relationship and possibly violating yourself, whereas the relationship helps avoid such self-relationship you might have had when younger. Am I right?

Speaker 2 [00:46:14] Yes, in a low-quality relationship, you feel alone, lacking additional resources. A poor mental state, unsupported, unvalued, can lead to harmful consequences for oneself.

Speaker 1 [00:47:19] You've talked about high-quality and low-quality relationships. Now, I'd like you to tell me what's important in a romantic relationship for you. If there are other things.

Speaker 2 [00:47:50] I think I've already said a lot, but it's essential to feel you can talk about everything freely, without fearing the other's reaction. Feeling there's space to discuss everything, from sex to future projects and ideals, and being open to change. Recognizing that your views evolve, expressing distress if necessary, having that possibility is vital. Flexibility, what I described earlier as compromise, not in a negative sense but being adaptable. Knowing some needs are not as important to oneself but crucial for the partner and adjusting accordingly. Savoring and sharing joy.

Speaker 1 [00:50:18] Sharing joy, aligning with being adaptable and willing to change for the other, is crucial for you.

Speaker 2 [00:50:30] Yes, but in agreement with oneself. A low-quality relationship changes for the other without aligning with one's values and desires, which is problematic.

Speaker 1 [00:50:47] You mentioned this earlier, but I'd like you to elaborate on what love means to you, based on your experiences.

Speaker 2 [00:51:04] I feel like I'm repeating myself, but...

Speaker 1 [00:51:11] Again, it's not really questions but expressing yourself freely. Take your time, repeat if necessary.

Speaker 2 [00:51:31] I don't have my wedding speech anymore, but I think that was a good answer. I'll describe it as what I feel thinking about my wife, her face in my mind. It's a warmth and wonder every day, seeing her, thinking she's amazing and unique. It's feeling like a better person every day. Love, to me, is both feeling this awe every day for the other person and for oneself, growing together.

Speaker 1 [00:53:06] You would say that this, how important is it in your relationship? Love.

Speaker 2 [00:53:20] For me, it completely defines the couple.

Speaker 1 [00:53:28] The relationship has central importance in it. We know there are different forms and ways of loving. And I'd like you to talk about how you know your partner loves you.

Speaker 2 [00:53:57] Well, as I described earlier, really, I find one of the most striking signs is listening to me, looking at me with love, telling me she loves me. Yes, of course, that's part of it. And the day she stops doing it, I will question it. But I think especially the day she leaves me alone to the point of disappearing, letting me make mistakes without saying anything, without shaking me up. That's when I would really say she doesn't love me anymore. Yes, as we said earlier, it's always about bringing out the best in me and encouraging me to take care of myself, ultimately to live long and happily. She doesn't want to lose me, and so yes, sometimes she shakes me up. And that really is a mark of love.

Speaker 1 [00:55:18] You said she looks at you with loving eyes.

Speaker 2 [00:55:24] Yes, also.

Speaker 1 [00:55:27] What does that mean, loving eyes?

Speaker 2 [00:55:32] I don't know, but sometimes I catch her looking at me. Now it's more when I'm with the little one, but it's simply looking at the other with, I don't know, you can see it on the face, you feel you are being looked at with love.

Speaker 1 [00:55:51] I'd like you to talk about one last positive interaction you had with your partner.

Speaker 2 [00:56:04] I don't know, it was just this morning, I sent her a house listing to visit. She was so happy because we had put that aside lately, and she was super excited about the possibility of visiting it this weekend. I said OK, I'll call. And she said great, I love you, thank you. That was at most 2 hours ago. Maybe there have been others, and I missed them because I'm in interviews. Recently, sometimes simple things, but for me, that was a positive interaction.

Speaker 1 [00:56:51] Conversely, could we talk about a negative interaction, the latest negative interactions you had?

Speaker 2 [00:57:00] Yes, this weekend, Friday evening, she came home from a dreadful workday. In distress, and she came to tell me what she had experienced. It was a lot of detail, and I understand she needed to vent. But she was venting angrily, loudly while I was taking care of the little one. I know it stresses me, and the little one hears it too. I must have done exactly what I hate, rolling my eyes like, oh, it's too much for me. She felt unheard and left, saying she wasn't listened to all day and still wasn't at home. So I went to her and said I'm listening, but first... After we talked, I told her I'm here to listen, but you came in talking very fast and loud. We can take the time to sit down; I'm with the little one, let's sit, take our time. Tell me what happened, and it turned into something positive. But the initial moment was negative.

Speaker 1 [00:58:46] From the moment she started venting.

Speaker 2 [00:58:49] Yes, when she comes in with all that tension, it becomes aggressive for me even though it doesn't concern me at all.

Speaker 1 [00:59:06] I'd like you to talk about the challenges in your relationship.

Speaker 2 [00:59:12] That. As I said initially, we have our little psychological problems. Each of us has different issues. So, how to manage them best to not impact the other. Clearly, for her, it's that when things go wrong, she shouldn't push me away or blame me. It's just taking a little stop! Taking time to... or, sorry, I had a lot on my mind. Similarly, I know when things aren't right, I might shut down and not talk. But I've worked a lot on accepting discussion and not running away. Those are the main challenges. Managing these issues to not negatively impact our relationship and the other, requiring us to work on ourselves alongside our couple's work.

Speaker 1 [01:00:39] Sometimes, in a relationship, everything isn't rosy. I'd like you to talk about the conflicts or arguments you might have with your partner.

Speaker 2 [01:01:01] Yes, it relates to what I said. The disputes we have can be when she's overwhelmed with tasks to manage. It becomes a dispute over me not handling enough, like making appointments, which I dislike. There are more of those with the little one; she says, "I'm managing everything, help me," and it becomes a topic. She reminds me of balance, asking me to do more. It's just her feeling overwhelmed. Another dispute is over my negative behaviors I can't stop, like smoking. She says, "I left you alone for [6-10] months; what have you done? Nothing. We have a child; what are you going to do? I tried to help you by doing this and that. What are you going to do?" And I work on accepting this discussion and not running away, saying I can't do anything. Another issue is when she comes home overloaded with anxieties, anger, and experiences of the day. It overwhelms me, and it can lead to disputes.

Speaker 1 [01:03:21] How often do these disputes happen, say, over 15 days?

Speaker 2 [01:03:30] Roughly, small disputes resolved within an hour are not very frequent, maybe two or three times a month, depending on periods. Major clashes where we argue all night and the next day are more rare, usually due to circumstances like biological phases, pre-menstruation, lack of sleep, stress. Rarely twice a year.

Speaker 1 [01:04:36] So about once every two weeks, a dispute.

Speaker 2 [01:04:40] Micro-disputes, yes. On average, we can say that.

Speaker 1 [01:04:45] And how do you resolve these conflicts?

Speaker 2 [01:04:49] We talk.

Speaker 1 [01:04:51] You talk.

Speaker 2 [01:04:53] We talk in phases because I struggle to manage these times. She also needs phases, first being sure she's right, then listening when emotions settle. We talk, talk, talk. What helped before was spending time in nature, hiking on weekends. It prevented clashes, bringing peace and space to discuss. But now, it's hard to reinstall those activities.

Speaker 1 [01:05:57] Besides talking and spending time in nature, what other ways do you maintain your relationship?

Speaker 2 [01:06:10] We maintain our relationship daily through gestures of affection, hugs, compliments. I often tell my wife she's beautiful and sexy, showing we are still attracted to each other. Also, sharing time and activities together, though less now with the little one. For instance, last weekend, we painted a terrace corner during the child's nap, feeling happy and wishing for another confinement.

Speaker 1 [01:08:09] You seemed hesitant about the word "maintain," does it not suit you?

Speaker 2 [01:08:19] No, maybe because it implies effort while it's natural. I have friends who schedule monthly restaurant and cinema dates, which seems forced to me, not spontaneous. That's why I hesitated with "maintain."

Speaker 1 [01:08:57] Spontaneity is important to you, indicative of the relationship's good state?

Speaker 2 [01:09:06] Yes, it's natural, flows naturally.

Speaker 1 [01:09:11] I'd like to know what could make you leave your partner.

Speaker 2 [01:09:21] I don't know, but I think about it, making catastrophic scenarios. I used to imagine leaving for a greater love or reuniting with my first love, but now I can't imagine being better off without [partner's name]. Sometimes the initial romantic feelings, excitement, might wane, but I know it can return with time. More likely, I imagine her leaving me if I mess up badly, like severe alcoholism endangering our child, prompting her to leave. If she stays in a job she hates, losing herself, I might struggle to help, but it would need to be extreme. I no longer think about leaving as I did before.

Speaker 1 [01:13:29] We talked earlier; would you say this relationship is good for you?

Speaker 2 [01:13:35] Yes, absolutely.

Speaker 1 [01:13:39] You mentioned the relationship helps you regulate and reach personal goals. Could you give an example?

Speaker 2 [01:14:05] Yes, having a child was something I wanted from a young age. I might have missed it because I don't take initiative. My partner pushed me through a big argument, realizing we needed to take steps together. She helped me achieve this personal goal by carrying and birthing our child. Professionally, she supported me in leaving a dissatisfying job at the University of [City], taking risks for better opportunities, even if it didn't lead to my own company. Now, I'm doing what I wanted, being paid for it, thanks to her support and confidence in my abilities.

Speaker 1 [01:16:57] Earlier, you mentioned the relationship as a reconstruction. Do you think you are the same person as before the relationship? Has it changed you?

Speaker 2 [01:17:27] I'm still the same person at my core, but I see myself differently, recognizing changeable aspects I once saw as barriers. I feel more control and choice over myself. My family thinks I've changed, but my friends see me as the same person who has flourished and blossomed.

Speaker 1 [01:18:32] Is it important to you to have remained the same person?

Speaker 2 [01:18:41] Yes, because otherwise, it would scare me, like being brainwashed. It would be concerning.

Speaker 1 [01:19:08] Maybe because you've discovered yourself, becoming more comfortable with who you are, and you don't want to change that.

Speaker 2 [01:19:30] No.

Speaker 1 [01:19:33] Regarding your partner, do you think she has changed during the relationship?

Speaker 2 [01:19:47] Yes, I see it and so do her friends. She's the same person but more at peace, with different reactions, goals, and a new direction.

Speaker 1 [01:20:45] So, it's not about changing but becoming a better version of oneself, improving.

Speaker 2 [01:20:57] Yes, improving to be better with oneself and others.

Speaker 1 [01:21:06] Do you feel safe in this relationship?

Speaker 2 [01:21:09] Yes, absolutely.

Speaker 1 [01:21:12] For example, can you open up to your partner about experiences, thoughts, and identity without fear of judgment or reprisal?

Speaker 2 [01:21:25] No, not at all. As I said, we can talk without judgment about everything.

Speaker 1 [01:21:36] Similarly, in distress or danger, can you turn to your partner for comfort?

Speaker 2 [01:21:51] Yes, absolutely.

Speaker 1 [01:21:55] Would you add anything to this feeling of security?

Speaker 2 [01:22:09] Good question. Yes, financial security. I've managed that since the start, always having a job, being the main breadwinner. My wife has been in various jobs, and I wish I could earn more to support her fully. If I fail, I don't know how we'd manage.

Speaker 1 [01:23:55] Let's briefly touch on another aspect of couple relationships, sexuality. It can be more or less important. Is it for you?

Speaker 2 [01:24:11] Yes and no. Over the years, it's had varying importance. During periods of little or no sexual activity, it could seem problematic for my wife but not for me. It doesn't define our love or connection, unlike previous relationships with lots of sexual activity but no real connection. Now, with our child, we have no sexual activity, but I'm okay with it unless compared to norms. We continue to talk, make jokes, and seduce each other sexually. We don't avoid it, just no activity. The challenge might be restarting it naturally.

Speaker 1 [01:27:20] Would you say you are satisfied with your sex life?

Speaker 2 [01:27:26] Yes, I don't have unmet needs.

Speaker 1 [01:27:46] I'll share my screen with a scale. Generally, my partner really listens to me. It ranges from 1 to 9, with 1 being not true at all and 9 being completely true. What would you say?

Speaker 2 [01:28:19] 7

Speaker 1 [01:28:22] Why 7?

Speaker 2 [01:28:26] Because generally, I feel listened to, though recently there have been moments when I haven't. Like being interrupted because of the little one. So, 7 reflects good listening with room for improvement.

Speaker 1 [01:28:57] Why not 6 or 8?

Speaker 2 [01:29:02] 6 seems too low; I feel listened to, with times available to talk. 8 seems too high; recently, she hasn't always been mentally available due to the little one.

Speaker 1 [01:30:01] My partner is generally responsive to my needs. Again, from 1 (not true) to 9 (completely true).

Speaker 2 [01:30:13] It's hard to answer. I'd say 6 or 7. The issue is my difficulty expressing needs. Sometimes it seems she's not responsive, but maybe I haven't clearly expressed them. When I did express my stress and inability to act, she responded. So, between 6 or 7.

Speaker 1 [01:31:20] 6 or 7, which one?

Speaker 2 [01:31:20] 6.

Speaker 1 [01:31:20] How satisfied are you with your relationship? From completely dissatisfied to completely satisfied.

Speaker 2 [01:31:48] Very satisfied, our relationship surprises me daily. Though adjustments are ongoing, I'd like to say completely satisfied one day, leaving room for growth.

Speaker 1 [01:32:20] From 0 (not at all satisfied) to 10 (completely satisfied), where do you place yourself?

Speaker 2 [01:32:37] 9.

Speaker 1 [01:32:41] Why 9?

Speaker 2 [01:32:46] I hesitated between 8 and 9. I'm very satisfied, happy, with a future to discover with her. I feel there's potential for more. So, I choose 9.

Speaker 1 [01:33:39] We're nearing the end. I'll summarize what we discussed; feel free to correct or add anything.

You talked about meeting your partner in [Year], getting together in [Year], and navigating initial challenges. You moved in together due to her job issues. You tried and succeeded in having a child, now [1-5] years old. Compared to your friends, you feel more together while they seem more mechanical in interactions, preferring spontaneity. You emphasized listening, humor, and being friends. Conversely, a poor-quality relationship lacks these, causing discomfort and doubt. Love is central, demonstrated by attention and natural interactions. Challenges are personal, balancing self-improvement without affecting the other, avoiding toxic behaviors. You have few disputes, resolved by communication and nature walks. The relationship helps regulate and reach personal goals, like having a child. You haven't changed fundamentally, discovering new aspects of yourself, with the same for your partner. You feel safe, able to open up and seek support. Sexuality is important but currently inactive, which is okay for you.

Anything to add or correct?

Speaker 2 [01:39:03] No, it's all good.

Speaker 1 [01:39:10] Just two final things. I'll send a questionnaire and turn off the camera for seven minutes. If you need help, don't hesitate.
