

Speaker 1 [00:00:05]: So, I would like you to tell me if you have a name or a word that you prefer we use to refer to your partner, girlfriend, spouse, partner... Is there something you are more comfortable with?

Speaker 2 [00:00:17]: So in the context of the interview? We can say [partner].

Speaker 1 [00:00:22]: How long have you been with [partner]?

Speaker 2 [00:00:26]: A little more than [1-5] years, actually. We officially got together on [Date].

Speaker 1 [00:00:35]: Listen, to start, I would like you to tell me about the love story you are living, the relationship you are currently experiencing with [partner].

Speaker 2 [00:00:45]: Well, it's... It's very intense, let's say. Yeah, that's really the perfect word, I think, for this. We are very close, we play a lot, etc., so we have... Yeah, we have a natural bond, we laugh a lot, we joke around a lot, doing silly things. I don't really know what to say. Basically, for me, it's the relationship - I just turned [26-30] - and it's the relationship where I flourish the most compared to all my previous relationships. It's where I flourish the most. And where I recognize myself, I'm myself, actually. The main thing, I think, that makes me feel good is that I'm myself and we are both quite - we are different in terms of life paths. We are very different in terms of social background, those kinds of things, etc. We have many differences, but overall, we find each other on the essential points. We are very similar on the essential points, very similar in our ways, the way of being daily and how we want to be.

Speaker 1 [00:02:20]: You said that you find each other on the essential points?

Speaker 1 [00:02:24]: Yes. Well, essential points... I don't know, after it's about how to behave with others, how we behave, or even our aspirations in life or things related to that... We are both creative, for example, that kind of thing.

Speaker 1 [00:02:53]: I would like you to maybe tell me about how you met. The beginning of the relationship.

Speaker 2 [00:03:00]: How we met. So she works, she is a [occupation] at [company]. Well, she works at [Company], basically a [occupation], anyway. She works at [Company] and we met. I lived right next to [Company] where I used to shop occasionally, and so I had already seen her at the checkout, etc. And she remembered my name quite well because when I came by and all. We crossed paths several times, a few times in the streets of [city]. She was doing her things, her activities, and I was doing other activities, like skating, those kinds of things. And we saw each other again once in [Company]. But this time she was shopping. And well, we just talked, we talked like "Hey, I know you!" and then we talked. And it was my birthday [1-5] years ago. So I invited her to my birthday, and we exchanged contacts, etc. And in the end, she didn't come to my birthday. Well, I... She wasn't really in the same mood as the party that was going to happen, I think. (laughs) But instead, we did something like, a little, an afternoon tea, etc. And that's it.

Speaker 1 [00:04:37]: You said she wasn't in the same mood as the party mood.

Speaker 2 [00:04:40]: Well, at that time, I used to have parties. Quite... Quite... Not intense [ndt: angry] but, well. (laughs)

Speaker 1 [00:04:53]: I heard what you said. So you met, you invited her to your birthday, you spent an afternoon together, you got to know each other. Is that it? So how did it go after that?

Speaker 2 [00:05:12]: Well indeed, we saw each other for the first time as a date that afternoon. And we kissed a little and all. Then after that, I think we saw each other a few days later, it was a Thursday, then we saw each other a second time on Sunday, the day after my birthday party which was on Saturday. That's it. Then after that, we went for a walk. So on Sunday, we saw each other, it was kind of the second time. I think she didn't really know where to position herself for the second date because we had kissed a little before, but well. It might not mean anything, well. And she herself - I don't know what she told you - but she herself might have had other things in mind at that time. And so well. We saw each other that Sunday for the second time. Well, directly when I saw her, I kissed her. And she was like "well OK". And then well, it was a nice second day, we walked, we enjoyed. We had some intense moments looking at each other, things like that. Little walks, things like that. And then we spent [11-15] days together, spending a lot of time together before she left for two months to her family in the southern [location], in the [Location]. And so after that, it was a bit, it was a bit... Well, a bit of a special relationship because we spent [11-15] days together and then we had to wait [1-5] months before seeing each other again. And so the [11-15] days we spent together allowed us to say that, well, we wanted to wait those [1-5] months and, well. And I had just come out of a somewhat complicated relationship, especially with the lockdown, where we had to separate, things like that, and I told her "I don't want to go through the same thing again", to find someone and then in the end they leave in [1-5] months. Then maybe even more months if there are unforeseen events, I don't know. So I was a bit hesitant at first. Well, not hesitant, but let's say I had a fear. I told her anyway, I'm not going to stay chained. It was a bit complicated as a perspective, but well.

Speaker 1 [00:08:17]: If I understand correctly, you told her "we'll see after these [1-5] months".

Speaker 2 [00:08:23]: It was kind of already decided, but yes indeed we'll see. We'll see if we miss each other during those [1-5] months, we'll see if we want to see each other again, we'll see if we stay in touch... Yeah just, we take the path as it comes. And so yes. It turned out that we missed each other a lot and so on, that she settled the things she had to settle on her side, and that's it.

Speaker 1 [00:08:57]: You said at the beginning of the interview that you were very close. A very close relationship.

Speaker 2 [00:09:03]: Yes. So do you want me to elaborate?

Speaker 1 [00:09:08]: Yes, again, the idea is to have your feelings.

Speaker 2 [00:09:13]: Well, it's something that can... In all relationships, there are private jokes, things like that. But we have a lot, and we often tend to say the same thing at the same time, have the same kind of behavior at the same time. Even in terms of, well, we are a bit childish. We are a bit childish. So we get along well on that, and it's not something that is very common or easy to find, in fact, people who resemble you in that way. After that, it's difficult to put words on the closeness because in the end, it's more something... It's a bit like a beautiful trip, you can take beautiful photos, you can put nice words on it, but it's a bit hard to tell what must be lived, in fact. That's what I mean.

Speaker 1 [00:10:44]: Hm. Of course.

Speaker 2 [00:10:45]: But it's still very strong feelings. There are many moments where there are very strong feelings that are not really describable like that. Or in any case, feelings that I am not able to describe myself. And where we look at each other, things like that, and it creates... It creates quite vivid emotions, let's say. Yes.

Speaker 1 [00:11:11]: You said "we are kids".

Speaker 1 [00:11:14]: Well, a little bit, yeah. (laughs) That is to say, well, yeah, we play a lot. That is to say - and that hasn't changed since the beginning of our relationship - we play a lot. It's a bit like the first day, we still have... It's not pillow fights, but things like that, those kinds of things! We chase each other, those kinds of things. That's it.

Speaker 1 [00:12:01]: If you had to compare the quality of your current relationship with [partner] with that of your friends, for example, what would you say?

Speaker 2 [00:12:17]: Well, I'm not in people's lives. I think it's a question where everyone should answer that their relationship is better than that of their friends maybe? Well, I don't know. In any case, for me, it is indeed something I feel. Well, I see... I wouldn't say my relationship is better because what does better mean in this case? It's not really that. But in any case, there are fewer... I feel that there are still far fewer frictions, in any case far fewer moments of friction than among my friends' couples. Or I feel that we are a bit, maybe more on an equal footing, we maybe have the same expectations at the same time, those kinds of things. And that maybe we don't really have resentment. There are things - even in recent couples or young couples, and even more in older couples - but there is a lot of resentment often fueled by small frustrations sometimes. Infinitesimal things. And that's not resentment, it's not resentment that we hold on to from this side... What's it called. I don't have the term anymore. But basically, holding a grudge for a long time for something that's not so serious. Yeah, I'd say it's mainly not holding a grudge because in fact, we tell ourselves - it happens sometimes that there are small, small clashes, it's normal - but a behavior we didn't like we are either quite considerate to... For example, once in a [location] [1-5] month ago let's say, with a friend, we went for a coffee with a friend and [partner] and I found that I was talking to her not like I usually do, that is to say, I was a bit harsh or... Anyway, I found myself a bit stupid. I told her "Sorry, I'm sorry, I don't know why I'm talking to you like that". It was a bit of humor, it was even humor. But it was a bit... I found it a bit stupid. I found it a bit... The kind of thing that can easily upset you when someone talks to you like that or makes a bit harsh humor. It's a bit dry humor, with small remarks but which are not really, under the pretext of humor. But so, I told her "I'm really sorry". She didn't take it badly, but the fact that I try to be careful, to be considerate, it also means that we can directly bring up things that either bother us - either us and not necessarily the other. We ask "Does it bother you if there is this kind of thing, if I say that" or "there is this subject that bothers me that you do" for example and we talk about it. And generally, we laugh about it and it moves on. And then and then, that's it. We don't stay stuck on things, on things - and we don't hold grudges months later "Oh yeah but you remember you did that". We talked about it once and that's it.

Speaker 1 [00:16:14]: It's a way to - sorry, I'm listening?

Speaker 2 [00:16:17]: I don't know if it's clear, but that's it.

Speaker 1 [00:16:21]: I heard what you said, don't worry. It's a way, if I understand correctly, to defuse conflicts before they even arise.

Speaker 2 [00:16:30]: Well, that's it, yes. After that, it can always happen that in situations of anger or tension, like a trip or I don't know what, it happened on a few occasions where I... Not got angry, but where I had to take things in hand. Where [partner] - I keep my calm quite well, I'm not very prone to stress, etc., [partner] is more prone to stress and sometimes with stress you can get carried away. Or you do actions that are not necessarily thought through. And it happened where I said "Hey calm down, it will be fine. But don't talk to me like that because sometimes there, with stress, you can talk a bit harshly, don't talk to me like that, and that's it, it will be fine. Calm down and it's good". And maybe I too, at times, got angry, or wasn't correct because I was angry with other people for example and [partner] suffered the consequences too. Well, I don't know. But we try to talk about it. At some point we will always talk about it.

Speaker 1 [00:17:52]: If I understand correctly what you're telling me, it's that compared to your friends, what you find in the quality of the relationship is this ability to immediately talk, defuse and not hold a grudge for small things, which also involves an introspective capacity towards oneself.

Speaker 2 [00:18:08]: That's it. An introspective capacity, analyzing oneself. I think we are both in the analysis of what we do, in the analysis of the world around us. We are both trying to maintain a kind of awareness of our environment or the people around us, those kinds of things. So yeah, I think it's a quality that can only be beneficial for a couple - even for other things - but for a couple in this case.

Speaker 1 [00:18:48]: It's something that contributes to the quality of the relationship. Are there other things that you observe in your couple that you do not observe in your friends' couples?

Speaker 2 [00:19:02]: I think. Mainly. I think that's the point that strikes me a little bit. Yes, that's it. There are certainly many other differences because every couple is different. The fact that we are very playful, etc., is less the case [ndt: in other couples]. But after that, it's the differences of each. It's not really couple differences, it's more temperament differences, natural behavior in itself, people. So of course, after that, it plays in the couple. There are couples who will be maybe more playful, couples more adventurous or others routine-oriented or those kinds of things. For us, well that's our characteristic. It's differences that exist between all individuals more than in couples specifically.

Speaker 1 [00:19:58]: If you had to do the same thing, if you had to compare the quality of your current relationship with [partner] with that of your previous relationships. What would you say?

Speaker 2 [00:20:16]: I would say that it's something that is... Well, we generally have the same expectations. We really communicate and exchange. I have always been a bit the instigator of communication because often, precisely, there were unspoken words or reproaches about things, and I have always been willing to talk, to communicate, to say directly the things that were not right. So that's it. So that's something I didn't necessarily find before, the communication. The closeness, I've never really had it before. And the fact that the feelings are also very strong. That's not necessarily something I've had before. There were feelings, but it was much less said. There were far fewer expressions of love. Much more subtle. And the fact that... Well, I feel that compared to all the people I've been a bit out with, and so on, I would say that it's the one who manifests, who has manifested, who manifests, and who I hope will manifest, the most... Not attention but affection for me, for my person. So that's it. I find that it's the best relationship I've had. It's not for nothing that it lasts actually. I see compared to other relationships, my other longest relationship which lasted three years. We are not at all on the same levels, on the same relationship, on those kinds of things, in terms of complicity and evolution in life, and even compared to what we have done. Because the person I was with for [1-5] years, we hadn't necessarily found an apartment together. Searching and finding an apartment together. We both had our separate apartments, for example, even though we lived, I lived a lot with her, and vice versa, she came to my apartment. But we had always kept separate apartments. Because I made music, I had a big room to make music, she had a very small apartment, etc. So, for practical reasons. It served me a bit as an office in quotation marks. And there we had this project to find an apartment together. Compared to our other relationships, we maybe built more things together. Or in any case, we maybe have more projects. We have more will to really do things together, to do things together. Yeah.

Speaker 1 [00:23:57]: If I understand correctly what really differentiates your current relationship, the quality of your current relationship compared to previous relationships, is the love or affection that you can not only feel, but also receive, as well as a certain form of complicity that is more natural. Were you going to say something?

Speaker 2 [00:24:25]: No, no, that's it. You summarized in a few sentences what I was saying. And that's it, yes, overall it's well summarized. And so maybe the fact indeed of having more projects together, building more things together. Yeah.

Speaker 1 [00:24:47]: There is also a desire to build things together.

Speaker 2 [00:24:54]: That's it. While in the end, the relationships I approached before, it was more. Well, it was more... Even if there is always a part of this thing because it's the way I approach life. But it's... I'm good with you at the moment. And... I'm not necessarily looking for more. I'm good with you at the moment, there's no reason for me to question it if I'm good with you at the moment. And the day I'm not good anymore. And the day we're not good anymore or the day you're not good anymore. Well, we stop. I've never really stressed myself out about it. Maybe because those are relationships we have more between [16-20] and [26-30] years old, I don't know, for example. That's it.

Speaker 1 [00:25:46]: So you would say that now you stress yourself out more with that.

Speaker 2 [00:25:50]: Yeah, I stress myself out more, but it's just maybe the mood or the paradigm of the relationship that is a bit different. It's that maybe today, maybe today I tend to work more on things, to more... In fact, I think it's very related to - more than with the couple, it's very related to myself. It's just that, at [21-25] years old, for example, at [16-20] years old, I didn't know where I was going at [21-25] years old - well even from [16-20] to [21-25] years old, it was a bit more la dolce vita. I was discovering a bit. Following problems in my previous life, I was discovering a bit more the world at that time. A bit like an adolescent in quotation marks. Or a... Yeah an adolescent, I would say. And then I discovered a lot of things. I experienced a lot of new things, those kinds of things. And let's say from [21-25] years old to [26-30] years old, I maybe started to work more on projects in itself, more than before doing a lot of things, trying things, and so on, I started to sculpt the blocks that I had placed between my [16-20] and [21-25] years old. And so now, let's say that, I don't know, I just turned [26-30], I tell myself "I sculpted in these blocks, I sculpted a lot of interesting things. Wouldn't I try to assemble these sculptures and make an interesting staging?" I don't know if the analogy is very meaningful, but it's something that speaks to me right now. But that's it, I try to build something. A bit more in the long term, maybe.

Speaker 1 [00:28:03]: If I understand correctly what you're telling me, in fact, what you are expressing is the fact that you project yourself more also in your relationship, which means that you not only have a day-to-day approach linked to pleasure, to the moment T as you expressed it before, but also to what can happen after that. And so maybe a stronger perspective of the relationship itself.

Speaker 2 [00:28:26]: That's it. It's being able to... Yes, I think that before the relationship I had I didn't necessarily... In fact, I had asked myself a few times the question "Do I see myself" like "Do I see myself with this person having children" or living together, etc. So I asked myself the question even if the project was not to have children. But it's just that I asked myself if for example, in terms of values, in terms of way of thinking or way of approaching intellectual things or I don't know what. If I thought this person was capable of raising children for example. It's a bit silly because I'm not sure - not that I don't want children because I know I would like to have children - but I'm not sure it's compatible with my way of approaching life. Well, there are many things that are complicated, even ecological things, etc. There are many people who are a bit in this reflection of they are not sure if they want children - well they know they want children but they are not sure they want to have them. So it's a bit silly maybe to think about it, but I find that having someone who in my head can have this role, well it's still someone... It's someone with whom I want to stay. And then well we'll see.

Speaker 1 [00:31:12]: And if I understand correctly, you project this role on [partner], which you didn't do on your previous partners.

Speaker 2 [00:31:26]: Um... (long pause) Yes. And there might be one person with whom I could project a bit of that, but it was a relationship that was "aborted" in quotation marks. It wasn't a relationship where there was really an alchemy on both sides. It's a bit of a one-sided thing, where there is interest, but it's much lesser, in any case from one person's side. So in the end, you can't really project yourself either. So I would say yes.

Speaker 1 [00:32:07]: Hm. I would like you to tell me what a high-quality relationship is for you.

Speaker 2 [00:32:15]: It's... Well, it's our relationship already. (laughs) For me, indeed, we have a high-quality relationship. Because I had the leisure to see that indeed, there are other couples who argue, who... There are too many unspoken things, things like that. So a high-quality relationship, it's a bit of everything we talked about earlier in the interview. It's the fact of communicating, the fact of laughing, the fact of having discussions, the fact of having common values. The fact of living things, the fact of... Despite the fact that we work a lot she and I and despite the fact that we have a lot of activities on the side, always keeping a moment to take care of the other as well. Because there, for example, she left for [1-5] months in the [Location] and there I work [11-15] or [16-20] hours a day. And I get up, I work and I go to bed very late and I work, because I work at home. And it's not very positive. But that's it, if she wasn't there, that's what I would do a bit. And the fact that she's there, the fact of having a good relationship with that, it means that I stop doing that and I take the time to be with her and live things. And because you have to maintain, you have to maintain that. You shouldn't let big things die for things as trivial as work for example. So that's it, I think there are things that are more important than work, than my work. Well there are things... That [partner] is more important than that and that our relationship is more important than that.

Speaker 1 [00:34:38]: You talked about communication as something that is part of a high-quality relationship for you. How can we know we are in a relationship with communication?

Speaker 2 [00:34:55]: Well. From the moment there are still times of exchange, indeed. Or... After, do you really know it? I don't know. You know it because by living it, you see that when there are problems you talk about them, etc. So you know it empirically, by the force of things. When you know that in the past, you had problems and you talked about them and you had things, you talked about them. Well, so there, you know you're in a relationship with communication. So after that, there are always things that can be unspoken or, well... I mean we are never 100% I think in communication, but.. I think that - I don't like to give numbers like that, it doesn't mean anything - but let's say you say 90% of what you feel, of what you feel is important to say. And after there are maybe 10% of things that are inside you, introspections or thoughts that you still keep to yourself. I think a relationship with communication is not when you say everything, but you know you're in a relationship with communication when overall, in the past you have already talked. You know you talk about things that are important, that stay on your heart or... That's it.

Speaker 1 [00:36:38]: Things that are important.

Speaker 2 [00:36:39]: Yeah. (with emphasis)

Speaker 1 [00:36:42]: You talk to me about the importance of communication in a relationship. What role does it have for you? Is it something that allows to fluidify the relationships, to increase the satisfaction of...

Speaker 2 [00:36:56]: Well, it allows... I'll go get some water. I'll be right back.

Speaker 1 [00:37:38]: Please.

Speaker 2 [00:37:40]: Communication, so the virtues of communication. I would say it prevents misunderstandings, for example. To talk about problems, etc. And to solve problems and to project oneself. But it also allows... It's not just something utilitarian I want to say. Communication can also be laughing, creating things, discussing things, putting ideas together, asking the other for their opinion on projects that don't necessarily concern them. But well. Consulting them, for example. Those kinds of things. I'd say those are all the virtues of communication.

Speaker 1 [00:38:39]: You're telling me about what a high-quality relationship is for you. I would now like, on the contrary, you to tell me what a low-quality relationship is for you.

Speaker 2 [00:38:53]: I would say... I would say maybe... When it's all about appearances, maybe. I would say when it's about putting expectations on someone. Putting expectations on someone when this person doesn't meet your expectations actually. Not wanting to change them but wanting imperatively - consciously or unconsciously - to make the person you're with match the person you want them to be. I don't know if that's clear. Having a bad lens in the brain for that. I would say a low-quality relationship is also when you have a relationship with someone but... Where you yourself still have too many problems. Being in a relationship with someone while you have too much internal neurosis or things like that. I think that can be a factor that makes it a low-quality relationship or that will create problems in itself. Well, if you're not serene with yourself, I tell myself if you don't know where you're going, if you have neuroses or things like that, inner demons or I don't know what, I think it can be a real problem. After that, there is also a way in a relationship to work on that. I'm not saying it's impossible. It's not impossible to work on yourself. But in any case, it can quickly be problematic and sometimes, it's things that can't necessarily be solved together. It's things that have to be done alone. And so I think that in a low-quality relationship, that can be there. So, we said, communication, communication is a quality, so not communicating, that can cause problems in a relationship. That can be a sign of a low-quality relationship. So not communicating, but also it can be not feeling confident in yourself, not feeling listened to or not feeling the other as a possible confidant. That is to say, having the impression that they will judge you or those kinds of things. So it's the side of being comfortable, in fact. Not being yourself in a relationship, that can be...

Wanting to play a role, it's still something very superficial, where you're not necessarily yourself, where you play a role, you... You lie a bit to yourself or in any case - it comes back a bit to what I was saying, wanting the other to be someone they are not. And sometimes it can apply to yourself, wanting to be someone you are not to please someone you find great. And so you have to be like that for them to love you, because otherwise, well they don't like that kind of character. I am like that, I mustn't behave like that because it's not going to please them and so they won't love me anymore. And I would say that it doesn't really work. It never really works to deny who you are. And sooner or later, there will be a sort of distrust or something like that that will make... That will make it not work and that it will... Or there will be a bit of pain on both sides or on one side maybe. People who have control over others, etc. An unequal relationship, a relationship where things are not shared, where one is in domination over the other, whether it's physical, moral, material, whatever you want. And what other characteristics of bad relationships are there, that I would qualify as bad relationships? Oh there like that it's all that came to my mind.

Speaker 1 [00:44:06]: There's quite an important notion of acceptance in what you tell me. Accepting yourself and presenting yourself to the other as you are. And also accepting the other.

Speaker 2 [00:44:24]: Yeah, I think that's quite fundamental. We're not going to do personal development, but I think those are the fundamentals of a being. It's first to be in fact. It's to embody yourself. And it's to know where you're going, it's to know what you think, it's to know what you want. And when you're coherent with yourself, from that moment on, I think you can consider becoming two.

Speaker 1 [00:45:07]: Becoming two.

Speaker 2 [00:45:10]: Well, in quotation marks. After it's a bit of a double entity because... I'm not... It's not a question I've thought about so I don't like to comment on things I haven't really thought about. But I don't know yet if it's something good or if it's something that is done... The fact of being a couple, you see where you become, yeah, two. What I mean by that is to see the couple as an entity and depersonalize yourself in quotation marks or no longer embody yourself. So it's not something I've thought about. So there like that, I don't want to say anything. But currently, I'm trying to build something where we are... Where the couple, our couple is an entity. And it's something strong that we work on, while preserving, while I preserve, what I love for example. Preserving my own individuality. That's it.

Speaker 1 [00:46:30]: If I understand correctly, you speak of the couple as an emergence, an emergent entity that would have its own tangibility, to which the two parts of this couple would be parties and, in a sense, dedicated to the creation of this entity that would correspond to both of them.

Speaker 2 [00:46:52]: Well yes, I think that's a bit it. That's a good summary. That's a good summary, I have nothing more to add to that.

Speaker 1 [00:47:04]: You talked about the things that were for you, according to you, constitutive of a high-quality relationship and a low-quality relationship. I would like you to tell me about the most important things, if there are others, for you in a romantic relationship.

Speaker 2 [00:47:20]: Um... After that, I think it's just a mix that works or doesn't work. In itself, I think we can have quite different personalities, and still get along well together, make a good couple. And just as well, we could very well have quite similar personalities and not.... That it never really fits. So I would say... The question, can you remind me of the question?

Speaker 1 [00:48:11]: That you tell me about the most important things in a romantic relationship for you.

Speaker 2 [00:48:20]: Yeah, I'm thinking a little bit...

Speaker 1 [00:48:23]: Take the time to think, once again, what interests me is your feeling, your experiences.

Speaker 2 [00:48:30]: No, but that's it, so, I would say it's the personality. The personality of each, how it's going to mix. Each individual makes a different mix and will create a different couple. And that's it.

Speaker 1 [00:48:54]: What's important to you is the adequacy.

Speaker 2 [00:48:58]: That's it, yeah. Being able to find each other on things and despite the differences or despite the similarities or... That's it. Being able to find each other.

Speaker 1 [00:49:09]: You also talked to me about a mix, it joins this idea you described earlier, of the relationship as an emerging phenomenon, an emergence of the interaction of the two individuals, to create something.

Speaker 2 [00:49:21]: Well yeah yeah. That's it again, it's a summary, I have nothing more to add to that, on the mix.

Speaker 1 [00:49:34]: I would like you to tell me, based on what you have experienced, what love is for you.

Speaker 2 [00:49:41]: So what is love for me. So I would say I'm not anyone to give the definition of love. So I would say it's my way, in any case, of living it. So, it's already the first time in itself that I have love like that for someone that makes, when I think of them, it makes me... It gives me strong emotions. I never had anyone before someone who was really hard to leave. Or someone I was eager to see again. Not that I wasn't happy to see someone who missed me but it wasn't the same. So I would say my conception of love, it's having someone you think about someone that when you think about them, it makes you laugh, it makes you smile, it makes you cry, it makes you whatever. It creates emotions. Depending on, depending on the subject, depending on the characteristics you think of this person or depending on the moment or depending on the mood I have, at the moment when I think about it, I don't know.

And in my case, love, it goes through sharing things, being playful, having fun and creating a kind of complicity in fact. It's even something that can be found in friends, but also a complicity, where, when you look at each other without saying a word - for example, if you're in a room where there are a lot of people, you're at a party, and you look at each other and you know what the other person is thinking. It can happen with friends, but it makes complicity a component of love, but not just one of its components because we can find it in a friendly relationship too. So after that, there is "friendly" love in quotation marks, I guess. Something I feel a lot less. But... What other characteristics could I give... I don't know if I have many other characteristics. After that, it's something, it's a phenomenon that is really very hard to really describe. But that's it. In what I've mentioned, there are already some clues on how I envisage this phenomenon. After that, it's when you talk about someone and you think, when you have this particular person in your mind, or who passes in your sentences when you talk to someone else and it gives you a little smile, a little silly smile and things like that. That's it.

Speaker 1 [00:54:07]: You would say it has what importance in the relationship.

Speaker 2 [00:54:11]: It depends on the relationship. It depends on the relationship. I would say that, maybe for people, I would say it has relatively less importance. Well, relatively less. Who prefer, who attach themselves to other more material things, who attach... Who attach themselves to prestige, who attach themselves... Or even to adhere to desires to build a family, etc. So I don't know what importance it has. For me, it has a lot. After that, it's to me that you ask the question, so it's normal that I give you my feeling. And for me, it has a lot. I can't see myself being with someone I don't like in itself. Beyond love, because I still... Well, I don't fall in love every day. And I've been out with more than two people in my life. And I didn't fall in love with each person. However, I had, let's say, at least a crush. Maybe the feeling of love but in a soft version. Or in any case the beginnings. And so indeed for me, it's something capital. If it's not love, at least having a crush, at least having something that makes... Well, what's the term. That there is a feeling. That's often the term used. Sometimes maybe wrongly or rightly I don't know. But it's a term that's often used to say "Oh well, I don't have the feeling with him" or like "I don't have the feeling". Sometimes it's a bit silly excuses - silly I don't know - but sometimes it's a bit, it's something in any case that is used sometimes as a pretext or you don't necessarily need to argue because the feeling, what does it mean? It's as vague as love, you see. But so indeed, today, I would say that, and even forever. For me, the feeling, so if it's not love, it's at least the feeling, the crush, we'll translate that with a French word that's in the dictionary. (laughs) The crush, having a crush or love for someone, well, it's something that is for me capital. Which has a very important importance if not the most important. Otherwise, what's the point? Otherwise, I'm very good alone.

Speaker 1 [00:57:28]: You said you've had more than [1-5] girlfriends, how many partners have you had?

Speaker 2 [00:57:35]: That means uh... Uh... Real relationships let's say.

Speaker 1 [00:57:40]: That you consider as relationships.

Speaker 2 [00:57:47]: Oh man, I need to count. (pause) It's not easy. Let's say real relationships, real relationships. Not many, really. Real relationships? Not many. (pause) Let's say [6-10]. Let's say [6-10] somewhat lasting. Of very variable duration.

Speaker 1 [00:58:40]: We know there are different forms and ways of loving, and I would like you to tell me how you know your partner loves you.

Speaker 2 [00:58:50]: Uh. I don't know if... Well, I do know, but... But it's daily proofs. And what are the proofs? The proofs are paying attention, it's when she pays attention to me or worries about me, even though ideally, I try and try to worry her as little as possible. And she does the same, but well, I also worry about her sometimes for other reasons. So it's the fact of worrying about the other, well in this case, about me. There you go, little attentions... Whether it's little love notes, some... "Efforts" in quotes. Well, not efforts, it's not efforts but... Lots of little... Not concessions, not efforts, but... I don't know, some... I can't find the term that seems really suitable. Maybe putting aside certain things, I don't know. What else makes me know that [partner] loves me? All the moments when we just say it to each other, yeah, when we just share our current feelings. The moments when we don't say anything and just look at each other. And then the moments when... Yeah, even the moments when we say nothing, when we spend time lying together.

Speaker 1 [01:01:03]: You talked about concessions, you were looking for a particular word.

Speaker 2 [01:01:13]: Yeah. I don't know... After, I... It's not something I'm really fixed on because. I imagine that if we always make concessions, we always make concessions in love, I'm thinking and right now, I remember, I see myself, I don't know, making an effort to do something, to go to an event, to flea markets when I'm tired. Because it makes me happy to be with her, and sometimes, we don't have time during the week to be together. And despite that, I'll make a little effort to do something that I wouldn't necessarily have done initially, for example, because I'm not in the mood. Things like that. But I wouldn't say it's something that should be very important. Well, not not important, but not something that should take a major, considerable part. It should remain something where the concession is exceptional in quotes. Well, not exceptional, but less frequent. As infrequent as possible.

Speaker 1 [01:02:46]: You say as infrequent as possible.

Speaker 2 [01:02:48]: That means it shouldn't be... The relationship shouldn't be based on concessions, because then we reach a point where indeed we are no longer ourselves, where we are no longer in line with our desires, etc. That's why I talk about concessions. We always make them because we are always a bit different, we always have slightly different desires. And there's nothing wrong with knowing how to make concessions, etc. But there's also nothing wrong with knowing how to stop making concessions. And I think it's important to stay true to oneself. And if, by saying that it should be as infrequent as possible, what I mean is that if there are too many concessions, maybe there's a problem with each other's expectations and that the expectations are too different and that the interests are too different. And that in the end, it won't hold up in the long term and we can ask if it's really a relevant relationship. That's why I say, it should be as little as possible. I think the fewer there are, the better it is. I think concessions are still something negative. That's why it's not the word I like to use for that. Because in fact, I would qualify concessions by the negative side of repressing one's desires. Whereas what I would like to say, what she can do or what I can do a bit out of love, it's not concessions, you see, it's translatable by concessions, but it's more doing something with the other, a bit for the other, but... It's very hard to describe.

Speaker 1 [01:04:37]: A form of voluntary effort.

Speaker 2 [01:04:38]: Yeah, that's it. Without necessarily betraying oneself and all, that's it.

Speaker 1 [01:04:44]: Something we agree to do for the other because it makes us happy to do it for the other.

Speaker 2 [01:04:50]: Yes.

Speaker 1 [01:04:54]: A sort of accepted devotion.

Speaker 2 [01:05:01]: Yeah, that's not too bad.

Speaker 1 [01:05:02]: I would like you to tell me about one of the last positive interactions you had with [partner].

Speaker 2 [01:05:07]: Well, it was just earlier, I called her to tell her that we could do the interview this afternoon, because I am behind in terms of work, I have things that make it materially impossible for me to work, etc. So I thought we could do the interview this afternoon and so I called her to tell her that, to pass on the message. And also because we hadn't spoken for four days since she left. So she left last Sunday, it's Thursday. And so to hear her voice, to talk, to talk about everything and nothing. And so, after that, we were on the phone directly, and directly it caused an emotion, it caused a big emotion.

Speaker 1 [01:06:14]: I would like you to tell me about one of the last negative interactions you had with [partner].

Speaker 2 [01:06:34]: Oh, I have to think, I have to think. So wait. (pause) Oh yes! Yes, it wasn't that long ago for once. Oh yes. But again, it's negative, but even when there's something negative, it's always somewhat offset by something positive because in the end we always end up laughing about it or... Anyway. It's stupid too. (laughs) I'm the kind of person who sometimes, not picky, but I like things to be a bit squared away and all. Well, we bought cutlery (laughs) Damn, the absolute thirty-something thing. We bought cutlery, that's it, we bought two sets of cutlery when we moved in a year ago. And we have all the forks, we have all the knives, we have the big spoons... And almost half of the small spoons are missing. And... And I was a bit annoyed. Because I know very well, I take out a spoon and sometimes she makes little things to take away for her work, like lunchboxes. And so, I looked carefully, I checked if there couldn't be any scattered in the fridge, in a container or something. If there weren't any scattered... And there weren't. And so, I thought, we must have - well, she must have, because, let's be honest - she must have taken them and didn't pay attention, she lost them, etc. That kind of thing annoys me. So I told her "Damn but" if we don't have matching cutlery it annoys me - I'm stupid - if we don't have matching cutlery and all, it... I told her "Well, it's going to annoy me", "I'll get rid of what we have and then I'll buy more and then we won't lose the spoons and that's it". I know she hates waste and all. And so it would be a bit wasteful to give away cutlery. To give away cutlery that is almost new just because they don't match. And so I told her that to kind of trigger her let's say. And to tell her, well, be careful. But, after, I didn't say it meanly, but it was in a somewhat reproachful tone so it's a bit negative, it's still a reproach after all. And so I know she felt a bit... She told me in a message "I'll try to be careful". So it's a bit negative because it's a kind of reproach and all. But then I sent her a voice message directly with self-mockery, mocking myself a bit because... To show her that it's a small reproach, but that I laugh at myself for what I think, and I tell her I'm there, I'm being a grumpy old man, I'm being a grumpy old man you see, but, it's not important. But it's not important. So in the end, we laughed. After, we moved on to laughs directly after. It's a bit hard to find negative things in general, because it's always followed by a laugh, something positive, de-dramatization after. But let's say that was the last thing. And it was maybe Tuesday, let's say yes. But it doesn't happen often. It's not every week.

Speaker 1 [01:10:47]: You tell me about this anecdote, this interaction, why did you think, what makes it negative for you?

Speaker 2 [01:10:54]: Well because it's still a reproach. After when I say negative, again it's communication. If it had been really negative, it wouldn't have been an interaction if it had been really negative. If it had been negative, I would have yelled a bit alone in my corner, and that's it. So already the fact of interacting makes it not that negative. And I tell her there's something that annoys me and well I tell her. Anyway, we can always find positive in negative and vice versa. So I would say... But still, I put it under the negative sign because it's something, it's something that annoyed me at the time. I know I was there counting (laughs) counting those spoons, I was there (grumbling) "Oh damn, annoying, missing spoons". So I was a bit annoyed to start with. After I won't hassle her simply for three spoons, but I know that at least it annoyed me a bit. That's why I say it's negative. Initially it comes from a feeling of annoyance, at least annoyance more than anger let's say.

Speaker 1 [01:12:15]: I would like you to tell me, in your opinion, about the challenges in your relationship.

Speaker 2 [01:12:31]: The challenges... I don't really know for now, let's say. Maybe it will be related to... I wouldn't say, I don't know if there are any currently. Or maybe... Yes, yes, I've found. Currently, let's say the challenge would be to combine everything I want to do and the time I devote to [partner]. I know for example the fact that she left for the whole summer, both I miss her, and at the same time, I want to take advantage of that to the maximum to live my single life well. That is to say, make music all day, then work all day on my projects, do more sports, etc. It's things that I have a hard time doing daily because the organization of life as a couple means that sometimes she asks me to go to certain places for shopping and she asks me to go shopping with her there, while I organize myself differently, for example alone. Or washing dishes for two, it takes much longer. Things, things a bit... It's time-wasters, well not time-wasters, but things that I would organize differently for them to take me the least time possible, for example. And then there's the fact - then it can't qualify as time-wasting - but it's spending time with [partner], it's the fact that I stop working. Work or do my things when I'm not working. When I'm doing more music-oriented things, etc., it's... I stop around 8 pm, sometimes a bit earlier. And I stop around 8 pm and from 8 pm to midnight I don't work and then I go to bed. Precisely, sometimes I have trouble sleeping because I think about things, about things I have to do and all. And so I get up. It's quite common. Sometimes I get up from midnight until two or three in the morning and then I work on things. And that's it. Because I can't sleep. Because I think... In fact, I think about everything I couldn't do or didn't have time to do during the day, for example. Because, days, days.... Sometimes, my days aren't long enough to make progress on everything I want to make progress on. So the question is the challenges. And the challenge is to combine all my expectations, all the learning - because I also learn a lot in my everyday life - and to combine all that with our life as a couple. And to leave enough space, well for me, to become excellent in what I do. And also to have space for both of us, to live. To live, to live well, to share moments, to go to the restaurant, to take vacations, to spend evenings just together. Things like that. That's a real challenge because it's true that I tend to even when, when... In fact, if I work all day, I can't make music. And if I make music, I can't work because I'll do [1-5] hours of piano and then I'll do [1-5] hours of guitar for example. I'll do [1-5] hours of recording. And I won't have worked. So after work, it's in the field of [field] because I'm setting up my [company]. Basically. And so I want to make music. So I try to compartmentalize my time, well I try to keep music as something I do a lot because I consider myself as, well a [occupation] I don't know, but in any case as a [occupation]. Basically, it's a bit my first credo, let's say. And it's hard to find time to do that, my work in audiovisual and take care of [partner], it's really hard to combine all that. That's the main challenge. And the future challenges, I would say that maybe, how we will manage the end of [partner]'s studies. If she wants to go back to the [Location]. I like the [Region] so ideally, I would like to. But for now, I just don't know how we will approach that thing and I don't know if we will do it, I don't know. It's still unclear and I don't know if we will... Because I still have a lot of my life here. In itself well I like adventure and I like changing things, and I like discovering new things, no problem. But then professionally, I don't know. I don't know. As an artist what she can do. As an [occupation] in the [region], I don't know what she will do. Culturally even me, I work in the cultural field and even culturally it's maybe less focused on culture in the [Region] than for example in [city] which is a bit of a hub, not only of culture, but it's also a cultural hub, we must say. After, I know I could, in video, etc., I'm quite sporty and all, I could always make more sport-oriented videos in the [Region]. I think in terms of video, it's okay, there's work. There's a bit less in terms of music than, I think, but I don't really know the scene there. But she in the artistic field, well it's a bit dead there, I think. And I know she wants to promote culture in the [Region]. But well it's complicated. It will be a challenge, I think. We don't know how, I don't know how we will approach that. And then well. After there are all the other questions, all the other questions that can arise in a couple one day. Children things like that, but those are distant challenges. Anyway, we both concluded by mutual agreement that it would be a distant question.

Speaker 1 [01:19:57]: You talked to me about the current challenges, the challenges you think you will have to face in the future. I would like you to tell me about the challenges that maybe, if there are any, you have already faced.

Speaker 2 [01:20:11]: Well for [partner]... After, it's not really - well it concerns me but it's more a question that concerns her. When we met, she was with someone, I don't know if she mentioned that during the interview, but, when we met at the beginning, she was with someone. And so maybe it was one of the challenges, one of the first challenges to face. But it was mostly a challenge more for her than for me. Wait, I had a mic on, wait I'll turn it off. Two seconds. Yeah so I think it was more of a challenge really for her than for me, even though I still had to support her despite everything in the face of that, in the face of fears, in the face of... Well, everything you experience during a separation in quotes. It's a bit weird in itself because I was kind of responsible for that. It wasn't my fault, she didn't tell me anything at the beginning. So there you go, let's say it was a challenge we faced. What other challenges have we faced? After, I think it's not really challenges, it's more... Well, it's more personal challenges that have an impact on our life, our life together. In any case, that have an impact on us. And so, if it has an impact on us, it will inevitably have an impact on the other. So her parents separated, her pet, her cat died. I had big problems with my father, family problems like that. I work a lot because I have ambitions, etc., I have expectations, things like that. And sometimes it doesn't work out or sometimes I work on projects in collaboration with people, and in the end, I'm not satisfied with the project and the effort I put into the project, things like that. We face frustrations, sorrows, things like that, like everyone. It's life, really. It's the daily challenges. It's supporting the other to help them live better. Those kinds of things. So there you go, those are challenges we've already faced in quotes.

Speaker 1 [01:22:53]: You mentioned this a bit earlier in the interview, but we know that sometimes in a relationship, not everything is rosy. And I would like you to tell me about the conflicts and disputes you may have with your partner, with [partner].

Speaker 2 [01:23:06]: Not many. Uh... What is there... Not really, it's not really conflicts between us, it's more... It's rather linked, I would say, to something that will annoy us, and it will make us lose our temper. Me in particular because I tend to get angry quite easily. And there you go, for lots of things. And if there's something I don't like - but I won't get angry at [partner] - I'll get angry at people, I'll get angry at politics, for a behavior I see on the street, or a behavior that impacts me, and I'll get angry. It can be the behavior of a friend or... Things that will annoy me like that and then I'll get quite angry. And it's not directly related to [partner]. And [partner] knows more or less how to handle it like I know how to handle the times when she gets angry. She gets angry differently from me, but she gets angry too. She is sometimes stressed and gets angry because she can't either reach her personal goals, or she has rejections for art things or she does weightlifting and sometimes she can't lift a certain weight, and it will cause her a big emotional reaction for example. And so there you go, you have to be ready to deal with each other's moods. It's more things that bother us, but separately. In fact, it's not really [partner] who is a result of that thing. Well the results. Who is not a component rather of my anger or my state of anger. And similarly, I am rarely, rarely I think the cause of troubles for her. But on a few occasions, we had - it really counts on the fingers of one hand in [1-5] years, it's really... I remember one time on the train where... There was a time when I corrected her a bit harshly like that, I got a bit angry at her. Well, rather she was panicking a bit, she was doing things, she had a suitcase... In fact, they made us board first in the train and so she arrived and made a bit of a mess with her suitcase and so on, she was making a lot of back and forth in a kind of urgent mood. I tried to calm her down a bit, but seeing that it wasn't working especially... In fact no, I didn't get angry for that. I tried to calm her down a bit, gently. I told her at one point - you know she puts her suitcase between two seats at leg level - and I tell her "But it doesn't matter anyway, because there you put it there but no one can put their legs here so. So you're struggling to wedge it between the two seats at leg level and push it like that, just put it on the seat because anyway no one will be able to sit where you put it. So just put it on the seat, you're struggling, you're disturbing". In fact, there were people, there was an old person sleeping. I tried, but I know when you're a bit angry like that, the slightest criticism can make you snap a bit. So I told her that gently. And then I just told her "Calm down" and so on. So I know it can annoy people to say "Calm down"... Anyway, I was just trying to make her zen a bit, and so on. But so she told me off a bit, to speak bluntly. So me... I take the principle that, what I say, it's for her good too, so she doesn't get in such states and to reassure her and that I send her love in quotes, I just send her proof that I'm there and that there's no need to get angry and she sends me back something of anger and gets angry in a - well it's a second - but she speaks badly to me for a second or two like "Yes well anyway I got it!" And she sits down and then she pouts. So, directly, I change my tone, I take a much more serious tone compared to the usual tone on which I speak to her. And there, she knows, she gets that it annoyed me, and that, and that's it. This is a fight I'm telling you but on something that lasted... Just on the return trip, so when we got back home, I indeed, I spoke to her harshly and I told her "In fact just don't speak badly to me, don't get angry at me for things. If I tell you something, it's not for nothing". And so there we were in communication, it's just that it's a bit... We never yelled at each other and so on. But it's a communication where it's a bit harsh where I say things as I think them. And she sees me getting angry at other things a lot, but when I talk to her, I'm always, I'm always a bit of a duck anyway, I talk to her a bit very sweetly. Sometimes we act like kids and all, you know we talk (takes a child's voice) "Oh well go ahead". And the fact that I talk to her in a slightly more serious tone all of a sudden, it feels a bit strange. A bit like if I talked to you in this tone but in an even harsher, a bit harsher way. And so it feels strange to her. And so that, it's a bit of an anecdote this thing I'm telling you because it's not a huge fight, but at the same time, there haven't been many more fights. There's that I remember. There's a time when the same, it's anecdotal where she started crying or getting angry or both crying and getting angry over something, I don't even know what. It wasn't something really very important in fact. Except that there are times when you're not necessarily yourself. You're not in the capacity to receive an emotional load because either you're tired, or because you're already angry about something. And I told her the same way, quite harshly "Oh listen go ahead, I'm not ready. In fact, I'm not in the mood to console. I wouldn't be able to console you." And maybe that happened, let's say, maybe that happened twice this thing of she gets angry or she cries over something, and just I'm not receptive, I can't be receptive. There are many times when I console her, and so on and I'm there. And sometimes, sometimes, it happens to me - not to be annoyed - but it happens to me not to understand. Why she will be sad for, why she will get angry all of a sudden over something. So it's not annoyance, it's more that I don't understand. Because I relativize a lot of things anyway. Despite the fact that I get angry over other things, well there are many things that I relativize, and so I may not understand. But well, I'm there to console her anyway. And there you go. But there are times when if I don't understand, if I understand it's something really important - even though what is important, if it affects you it's important - but if it's something important, even if I'm not in the mood to console, even if I'm angry, even if I'm not psychologically receptive to assist, if it's something important, I know I will do it. But if it's something a bit trivial or something that is... Well a bit like a child she will get angry sometimes for something that is... That I know ten minutes later, it will be okay. And so I just tell her that, maybe twice, I told her "Listen, I'm really not in the mood to receive tears for a subject so trivial" for example. But it's really. It happens. Yes, it happens twice, I don't know. But it's... Honestly, we're on the anecdote. We rarely argue. We have very few conflicts in itself. Even differences of opinion, there aren't that many. That's why, that's why it's pretty cool. It's that compared to differences compared to other couples, we rarely argue. And it's not something bad in itself to argue. It's a sign that you communicate too, but then it's just that we don't need to so we don't look for a fight to communicate.

Speaker 1 [01:33:46]: You would even say that small clashes, like for example the spoon anecdote you told me earlier, that happens over fifteen days, for example. How many times could that happen.

Speaker 2 [01:33:58]: Uh... Let's say once a month? Not even. Maybe something like that, like the compost bin that had no lid, and last month I told her "Maybe you should do something because it's going to annoy me to have a bin in the middle of summer". I just told her "it's not really going to be possible to have a compost bin without a lid in the middle of the kitchen during summer". Well, there will be a lot of bugs, plus there were quite a few ants. There are ants - we are near a small courtyard - and so there are ants that can pass underneath. And there was a mini invasion of ants and so I just put everything that was lying around a bit, the vegetables, the fruits, everything that is a bit sweet, etc., I put that in a somewhat airtight container, and that's it. And after the ants stayed [1-5] days and then they left because there was nothing left to eat. And that's it, I made a remark "The compost, find a bin. Just find a new bin because you lost the old lid". Well, that's it, it lasts 30 seconds and that's it. So yeah, let's say once a month... Yeah once a month, to be generous.

Speaker 1 [01:35:31]: How do you resolve these conflicts or these little clashes, these little disputes?

Speaker 2 [01:35:42]: Well... I don't know, we listen to each other, we listen to each other and that's it. Yeah. And then, we potentially make decisions that will mean we might not reproduce, or then we'll make efforts on such a thing. Maybe me on anger, things like that. I think that maybe a reproach - well it's not really a reproach - but something that concerns her - no concern is an English term. That worries her, by which she feels concerned is the fact that sometimes I can put myself in danger or things like that. If I ride my bike fast or, that I tend to go into conflicts with people outside, what. But let's say, I have a vision where I'm not afraid, well I won't look down in front of people outside, that kind of thing. And it happens less now, but well, it happened more when I skated to be a bit outside. And there you go. But especially that in [city], as soon as you go out, the social context of the city means that as soon as you go out, you still have a lot of chances to meet people with whom there could be problems. It's a bit of a city that's on edge. So there you go, I think there's a social context, the fact that there are many people on edge, there's a lot of cultural population mix, etc., so people who don't have the same expectations and all that makes. Anyway, it's another subject, I digress. But what makes it, I can clash with people or whatever, I don't know. So that's something that can concern her for example, and then she talks to me about it, she says she wants me to be careful about certain things. In certain measures sometimes, I say to myself "Okay go ahead. Don't get into conflicts or let it go, don't respond, just move on". And that's it. Because I think of [partner].

Speaker 1 [01:38:17]: So it's through communication.

Speaker 2 [01:38:20]: Yes.

Speaker 1 [01:38:22]: Apart from communication, what are the other ways in which you maintain your relationship, by which you maintain your relationship.

Speaker 2 [01:38:31]: Well, I would say maybe food is good. Restaurants, things like that are always good. Even having picnics, things like that. I try to plan times. Well, the number one thing to take care of the relationship is I take time. It's that I give myself time and I try to just not forget, in fact. Not to - Because it's true when I'm alone, if I start making music, I can forget a lot of things. And so the fact that she's there, I pay attention to her. Like... Well I was going to say - it's stupid and it would be.. I was going to say like a plant that you have to water, but it's... It's not... Well it's more than that you see than a plant that you have to water, but I pay attention to her. You have to take time to do that, and you limit yourself. I limit myself to certain things, I limit myself to how far I go in certain things to take time to be with her. Things like that. After the time we have together, I try to organize it to sometimes do things, sometimes not organized, just because it's good not to necessarily have an activity to do, but also sometimes it's good to have activities to do things like that. It's time... Sometimes I suggest playing board games - she's not very into board games and well she's not very fine either, so we have interests that sometimes diverge, or rather occupations that are a bit different sometimes. So it's not easy to find something that brings us together. I'm very much a cinephile and I know she - it's not that she doesn't like movies, but she can't really handle not necessarily the violence, but handle the characters, handle emotionally the impact of the film. So that's why she doesn't like movies too much. So my main activity would be watching movies in fact. My main hobby is watching movies. And so then we do something else. I introduced her a bit to video game streams. Sometimes we watch streamers a bit, things like that. So that's a little daily thing we do while eating, things like that. After sometimes I drag her a bit into the courtyard, we have a small table in the courtyard to spend a little moment, precisely more calmly, eating a bit in the sun. Then recently I - it was a bit our two years also so I - well I had for a while the idea to do that for a while, even since this winter, so it's not just for the [1-5] years, it's just that our [1-5] years was a pretext to do that, and especially before she left. And so I took her on a little boat trip. We rented a little boat on [river] in [city] and we took a little boat trip, not very long [1-5] hours, but in the sun and it was cool. It's an experience we don't do every day, it's something we don't do daily. So that's it. It's restaurants, it's making small concessions, like I'm not very much into flea markets but [partner]'s main hobby is going to flea markets. I'm not very much into flea markets, it's not really my culture, it's not really what I do basically. Well, there you go, I'll go, I'll go to a flea market on Sunday even though in the morning I rehearse for [1-5] hours with my [group], that maybe I haven't slept all night because at night I was working. I have a third job which means I'm in a [location], well I do night shifts in a [location]. So sometimes - it only takes me, it's a few nights a month so it's not huge - but sometimes I do weekends. If I do the night from Saturday to Sunday, I don't sleep. I go to rehearsal, I rehearse until 2 pm and then I'm tired. But I don't really like going out on Sunday, I like to stay a bit cocooned and all. Well there you go, sometimes I'll force myself a bit to go to flea markets because I know we'll go for a walk, we'll spend some time together. It's that kind of little thing. After, there are many other ways to maintain, to spend time, to create, to just maintain the complicity.

Speaker 1 [01:43:26]: Maintain complicity, make efforts. Again, what you said earlier, make voluntary efforts for the other.

Speaker 2 [01:43:34]: That's it.

Speaker 1 [01:43:35]: I would like to know what could make your partner leave.

Speaker 2 [01:43:46]: Well right now it's not an easy question to answer. If I project myself I would say... The fact of, well betrayals, things like that or the fact of just not being loved anymore. If the relationship evolves and that, from one side or the other, there's no more love from one side or the other. There you go, betray trust but like, a lot. It would take a lot. But otherwise, I think it's something we can move forward with in quotes. It depends on the level. And then, in life, in the course of life, if there's going to be an evolution of our desires whether it's, I don't know, going to another country all of a sudden or leaving everything for something or I don't know, things that could be considered, that can happen in life. I don't know especially beyond that.

Speaker 1 [01:45:19]: Would you say that this relationship is good for you?

Speaker 2 [01:45:24]: Well, yeah.

Speaker 1 [01:45:25]: Yeah?

Speaker 2 [01:45:27]: I don't have much more to say, yeah.

Speaker 1 [01:45:28]: It can be, for example, that the relationship helps to regulate daily functioning, or the partner helps to regulate their own functioning.

Speaker 2 [01:45:45]: Well, it's true that in terms of positive points, if we want to describe them, if we try to describe them, it can indeed act as a sort of channeler. I don't know if that's a French word, but in any case... Yeah, it can indeed channel behaviors or make them evolve through feedback, the feedback from someone else can make behaviors evolve. Or we can just limit ourselves without being told, but we can also limit our behaviors to preserve the other person. So, behaviors or other things. In short, preserve the other or take care to preserve the other, etc. So it can be beneficial because it can also... In trying to preserve the other, we can also save or preserve ourselves, so to speak, I guess. So I know that it can... There are certain things that it can channel in me. And yet, and yet, I also remain true to myself and... So there are things I want to move forward on and it's good that she's there because it gives me motivation to move forward. But there are things about myself that I don't want to deny. So the fact that it gives a certain framework, [partner] has a very... She would say "old lady" side. It's true that she's [21-25] years old, and sometimes, it's me who, well she's never taken the tram at 2 AM, even after midnight, she must have taken it once after midnight, or even coming back on a Saturday night into the nightlife. She doesn't necessarily know it. I don't want her to discover it because it's not great. But we did a few evenings at friends' places for example, and these are things... Ending at certain hours, these are things she had never done before. And so the fact that she's there, it also allows to channel, well, to frame, frame meal times for example. You see, frame eating a bit, even if basically I don't eat just anything, I mostly eat foods like green beans, things like that. But I don't stress about it. And the fact that she's there, it also allows to frame eating a bit, to avoid going off track sometimes... I know I have the opposite behavior to [partner], which is - well I'm organized in my things, when I have things to do I'm organized in my things - but it's just that, well I can be a bit excessive. I get completely into doing things. Sometimes I forget to eat or to go out or things like that. Because I do a lot of work indoors. My workspace is at home. And there you go. I have everything at home and sometimes I think "why should I go outside?" Sometimes I go out to relax, and then I come across, I don't know, heaps of garbage and it depresses me, things like that. And then I think "why?" So yeah, it can make me go out, give me a framework. So those are advantages, added values. I don't know what else there is. On a daily basis, yeah, it's someone to laugh with, someone who gives love, attention, someone who gives feedback on projects, it's someone... There you go.

Speaker 1 [01:50:15]: A good relationship can also be the fact that the relationship or the person helps us achieve our own goals. It's something...

Speaker 2 [01:50:26]: Well, yeah, it definitely motivates... It motivates me to get results. Even if I want to get results because I want to do things for nothing. But it's true that sometimes, I know that, if I shot a music video or if I did a concert, well she's proud. Or if I make a good song, well it can make her proud. Or if I do, if in my work, I produce a good video or something like that, something a bit stylish and all, well she's happy "Oh it's good it's cool it's stylish and it looks good. It's professional and all." She sees all the energy I put into achieving a certain degree of - I wouldn't say excellence, but at least professionalism or... A certain level let's say, in music or other. It's clear that it makes you want to... To achieve your goals, to continue. But on the other hand, it can also be a slight hindrance because I can't do as much as I would if I were alone. There are also other points that are more negative, but I can accommodate those.

Speaker 1 [01:52:10]: I would like to know if you think you are the same person as before your current relationship. In other words, has the relationship changed you?

Speaker 2 [01:52:20]: I am the same person. I am the same person because... I am me. Of course, we always evolve, but I am the same person overall. Today, I might be even more thorough let's say. I'm even less afraid of offending people - not of offending people because that's not my goal, I don't like offending people - but yeah, I know that recently I distanced myself from some friends, and I'm less afraid of letting go of things. I'm less afraid of change so to speak. Even if it means leaving a circle of friends or leaving things. After all, these are things that concern me. But let's say I was able to do that and so I evolved in that way. Today, I'm maybe a bit wilder than before because, at the same time, I feel good with [partner] and... I don't know. I shouldn't end up isolating myself and living only for [partner], that's not the plan. But in any case, maybe it plays a part and maybe I'm separating from some friends because I'm no longer in agreement with them, or I've never been in agreement with certain beliefs or things like that, which makes... I don't know. It's perhaps something I've evolved on, but otherwise, overall, I'm the same person. I would just say that I'm the same person, with some evolution, and I'm the same person but with a mood, a general feeling in a state or rather a different psychic state perhaps. I know that when I met her, I partied a lot, I was a bit, a bit, a bit angry about many things. We were in periods, also social periods with a lot of upheaval between the yellow vests and there was COVID and things like that, and a government we think what we want about it, there you go. Which means that the evolution of certain personal relationships where... I wasn't in a very good mood. And maybe in need of affection or things like that and all. And yes, I'm clearly in a different mood, but I'm not significantly, I'm not different. That is to say, what I thought at the time, I still think today, for example. But it's just that it's the way of approaching things. And there you go. When we got together, it's true that it gave me - it felt a bit afterwards - but it gave me a bit of hope, the desire to do things a bit for others. Even if I do things for others, because I work with children, and so on, it's what led me to this job as well, among other things. But to do more for each other, to advocate more in any case, for climatic things - or rather against. Or against or for, it depends on what. So to advocate in any case for things. More than advocate because I don't necessarily like the term, but more to dialogue with people, to lead people to new things, and so on, telling myself that... And [partner] deeply believes that no one is really mean, bad inside and that people can always change, and so on. And it's true that I was much more positive when we met. After a while, I confronted too much stupidity to persevere in that and I told myself no... Well sorry, but people are really stupid. So the return to a state, to that state a little bit, a bit disenchanted let's say, or misanthropic. But despite everything I manage to accommodate it, I manage to live with it.

Speaker 1 [01:57:13]: If I understand correctly what you were expressing to me a little earlier, it's the fact that you have more confidence and less need for external validation since you find your validation and your signs of love and affection with [partner]. Which allowed you to distance yourself from some of your other relationships since you were more at ease. When I say at ease, I mean really, more stable on what you wanted to be and what you were.

Speaker 2 [01:57:43]: After it's not necessarily because [partner] validates, it's just that I also took that path. It's a path that goes from my 20s to 30s, I think. To become confident in who I am. Because it comes with reflection, it also comes beyond reflection, it also comes in knowing, well not defending your ideas, but knowing how to be consistent with your ideas. Because I have nothing to defend, people think what they want, and I think what I want and there's no point in trying to convince the whole world that what we think is better than... There you go. But so after that it's a global path that means that indeed, I don't necessarily care about what people think. But it's not the way I really want to express it because, I care about people. I care about people but I don't care about people, concerning what concerns me, what should concern me. After, I care about people because, the previous sentence would suggest that I don't care about people, really that I don't pay attention to others and that... I don't think I'm selfish, I pay attention to people. But there you go, I took this path of, I am myself above all, I embody myself and then I... There you go. I try to be consistent.

Speaker 1 [01:59:25]: This notion of embodiment comes up several times. You said it earlier, a being must be and it's important for you to embody yourself.

Speaker 2 [01:59:36]: Well yeah. Before living a life together, before living a life at all, you have to.... You have to... You have to... Yeah, you have to be. After we can get into philosophy, I don't know. But there are many people who don't necessarily think about who they want to be or who think it's not possible to think about who they want to be. That they can't actually choose who they want to be. Who spend their lives like that. And I know that death can come quickly and... And there you go.

Speaker 1 [02:00:29]: You were telling me about whether you think you've changed or are the same person compared to before your relationship. I would like to know, regarding [partner], your partner, do you think she has changed compared to before the relationship, during and compared to before.

Speaker 2 [02:00:53]: [Partner] has changed a lot. Well already physically. After she's younger than me, so she might still be more in construction - we are always in construction - but maybe even more in construction than me because it's the age that wants that, she's still a student. She discovers a lot of things, she discovers people. She also discovers herself, she still discovers her body, she still discovers what she thinks, she still discovers experiences, environments, well she still discovers a lot of things. And it's true that yes, I think she has maybe evolved more than me. But I want to say it's normal since she's younger. And yeah, already physically, she has done a lot of work on herself because precisely, the fact of discussing together, me who is basically sporty - I'm less so now because I don't have enough time, it annoys me - but basically I'm sporty. I also gave her advice for her who had a bit of problems, small weight problems. While she ate well but she couldn't have a physique as she wanted. Today, I think she's still not satisfied, but that, no one is ever really satisfied. But yeah she has evolved on that because I gave her advice, and then well she did her own research and today she has more knowledge than me on areas, like bodybuilding, etc. After I'm not, I'm not particularly in that niche. But in any case, I gave her some advice on diet, I also advised her to build muscle and I told myself that, yeah, it's important because you see she couldn't... Well I consider that every human being should be able to carry themselves. So I told her "Why don't you just increase your metabolism actually, that's also why you have problems, that you gain weight even though you haven't eaten" because she ate very healthy. After I told her "Also avoid eating, like you eat dried fruits, like almonds by clusters, by handfuls. It's very caloric, you see". After she expended a lot of energy, well let's not talk about fitness stuff. But basically I gave her advice like that to increase her metabolism and things like that. So she has evolved a lot physically, it has nothing to do with it anymore. And so the physical, it does play on the mind and vice versa. And so, yeah, I think she has evolved a lot. I wouldn't really know how to say in what. But maybe in certain reactions, in things like that. It's a bit diffuse, really. Because the physical overshadows everything else, because she has evolved a lot on that level, and so maybe she has a bit more confidence in herself, or I don't know. But it's not extremely evident. I don't want to make analyses, overanalyze something that I haven't really thought about and that doesn't come to me like that. So there you go.

Speaker 1 [02:04:10]: You can take the time to think about it if you want.

Speaker 2 [02:04:19]: No, I don't know. I'm thinking about behaviors she might have had before that she might not have now. (pause) Yeah no, I'm a bit stuck.

Speaker 1 [02:04:45]: Could we say that you feel safe in the relationship?

Speaker 2 [02:04:51]: Well yes, yes. It's true that we always need reassurance. I have a friend recently who was with his girlfriend, they got together during the first, second lockdown I don't remember. During one of the first two lockdowns, they locked down together and since then they were together. And they separated very recently. And because - well the person kind of... How to say, not denied it, but in truth she had met someone else. And there you go. And today, she's in a relationship with the other person. So the proof that it was... It was true. And so [partner] has a friend with whom she was a bit, well with whom she is a bit close, etc., they often talk, sometimes she spent a few evenings at his place and I'm there in a grumpy mode. Like anyone - I'm not particularly jealous - but after like anyone you can have a little thing in a grumpy mode. But after I never stopped her from doing anything, and then we talked indeed about embodying, I told her "I love you a lot and if you had to lie to me and everything always comes out, actually. Everything always comes out. So if something had to happen, if you had to lie to me or if it had to end. Well okay, it will happen. And I will know. And it's no use making myself sick, becoming jealous. Do what you want, you make the choices you want. And me whether I'm with you" - I don't want to be without her, but whether I'm with her, whether I'm without her, I will stay myself and I will be able to move forward. After, I was thinking about that a few days ago and I was saying to myself that indeed, it would cause a good, a good internal turmoil to be without her, because it's true that now my life, I conceive it with her. So it's obvious that it would affect me. But I'm still confident in the fact that... Especially I put betrayal in context. It's that if she had to cheat on me or I don't know what, or go out or... Well lie to me. Actually, I'm quite able to mourn things by telling myself that if someone lied to me, actually, that's enough to put me off. And likewise, if tomorrow she no longer loved me, if we had to separate - it wouldn't be good for me, that's clear, it would hurt me - but I would be able to accept it. I can accept things and I think that's essential. It's to be yourself, to manage to embody yourself, then to accept what happens to us and to manage to accept that people meet, people separate... And so if she had to no longer love me, I would be able to accept the fact that anyway, I can't do anything about it. It's a kind of fatalism, I don't know, but I would be able to do something else because I don't want to stay stagnant. There you go.

Speaker 1 [02:09:05]: Feeling safe. It can also be the ability to open up to your partner about your experiences, your thoughts, your identity, without fear of judgment or reprisals.

Speaker 1 [02:09:18]: We mentioned this about qualities. A good relationship is indeed feeling comfortable, discussing topics, feeling comfortable to confide, etc. And indeed, it's part of the criteria of a good relationship. And yes, today, yes. I feel comfortable to discuss, to say what's on my mind. To talk about problems or there you go.

Speaker 1 [02:09:52]: To be yourself.

Speaker 2 [02:09:54]: Yes.

Speaker 1 [02:09:56]: It can also be, we also mentioned the ability to receive comfort or attention from the other in case of danger or distress.

Speaker 2 [02:10:12]: Well yes, I have nothing to add to that.

Speaker 1 [02:10:15]: Is it something you identify with, that you have in your relationship?

Speaker 2 [02:10:19]: Well yes, after it's true that... It's not... In case of danger or distress... I don't really have a point of comparison. I don't know how she could really react. I know she can stress a bit. So I don't know if we go on an expedition, because I had taken her a few times into the mountains, like that, where we went bivouacking for a few days. And so those are experiences she hadn't necessarily had before. And so, if something happened to me there, a bit isolated and all, I don't know how she could react. I think she could handle it. I'm not necessarily convinced because I don't know, I don't really know how she reacts. I know how I react when serious events happen, health issues because I've faced that, but I don't necessarily know how she will react.

Speaker 1 [02:11:36]: It can also be in case of unstable or difficult emotional states.

Speaker 2 [02:11:42]: Yeah or maybe even in terms of illness too. I don't know, if tomorrow you fall seriously ill or I don't know, you lose your two legs. Yeah why not. Yeah, I think so, yes, I feel safe.

Speaker 1 [02:12:00]: I would now like us to address another dimension of couple relationships, which is sexuality. We know it can be a more or less important dimension in a relationship. What is it like for you?

Speaker 2 [02:12:13]: Well it varies by period, but it's true that it tends to be less important rather than more important. I would say that basically, she's younger so she hasn't had amazing experiences before, clearly. I think sexuality also has a connection with how comfortable you are with someone else and the fact that she can talk, etc., it's a real plus. She discovered things, - not because I'm better than anyone else in that area - but because she has more confidence. Just in fact, she's more comfortable, she has fewer things running through her mind. It's like asking someone to let go and asking them to solve equations at the same time. You can't let go and at the same time... It's a bit like that. It's just don't stress, and if there's something you're not ready for, well, no problem. And then accompany things a bit, etc. So there's the psychological dimension that makes it important in this area. So she discovered things like that because she didn't necessarily have an amazing sexuality before. For me, it's a bit more, a bit more... It has been a bit more abundant, let's say. There you go. A bit more... Let's say plentiful, that's good. And then in a couple a bit less because... After it depends on periods and uh... But indeed, I work a lot, she works a lot, we are very busy with things, we're tired in the evening and then sometimes it's not the right time. One prefers in the morning, the evening, in the bedroom. Sometimes, you don't necessarily find the same alignment and all. For all that, is it a problem? If it's experienced as a problem, well it is one. For me, I don't have any particular frustration. There you go. It's just that, indeed we sleep together less than we should, I think. But when there is an opportunity, it's cool. Honestly, I prefer that to a mundane thing, mundane marital duty in fact, because it has to be done. It annoys me actually. I prefer that there is an interest, that there is an emotional thing behind it and then it's cool. It has a real interest and there you go. Because otherwise, well the sensation of the sexual act, I know it and there you go it's done. There you go.

Speaker 1 [02:15:32]: You said we sleep together less than we should.

Speaker 2 [02:15:36]: Well. Let's say it would be, it would be good if we did it more often because every time we say to ourselves actually "Oh come on, every time we forget and all." But then we can't, we can't force things. So it's... Sometimes there are periods when there are more, sometimes there are fewer, it's like that. It's a question of availability, whether mental, professional or whatever.

Speaker 1 [02:16:10]: Currently, roughly speaking, what's the frequency of your sexual relations?

Speaker 2 [02:16:14]: Uh, I don't know... Because it's true that time flies by at an incredible speed. Honestly, it's not much. (laughs) Honestly, it's not much. I don't know, I would say maybe twice a month, honestly it's nothing. Yeah, one or two a month. No not one, one is really not much. Over a year, over a year - because you have to, you have to... Damn. Put it in perspective, but let's say two... Two, it's really not much. But it's not much but at the same time, I say to myself, that's why I say there you go. It's that... But yeah. Let's say two a month. But it's, it's, it's nothing.

Speaker 1 [02:17:05]: Are you satisfied with your sex life?

Speaker 2 [02:17:08]: Well I don't, I don't have any frustration. Precisely I have.... Well being [26-30] years old, having had plenty of diverse and varied experiences, I know that, I know that I've lived, well I've lived a lot of experiences and it's cool. It's not that I've had my share, but... there you go. And so yes today no, well it doesn't lack. What I miss is more the moments we can share like that, because it's an opportunity to share more special moments of intimacy, and generally it strengthens feelings even more. In any case, it's always an opportunity to say sweet words or things like that.

Speaker 1 [02:18:01]: You said - sorry I interrupted you.

Speaker 2 [02:18:04]: So it's always cool, there you go.

Speaker 1 [02:18:06]: You said it's not much, it's nothing.

Speaker 2 [02:18:12]: Compared to.... Compared to... In any case, to what I was sometimes more used to in other relationships, it's not much. But then, well, as I said before, it's that I also see it as more quality compared to quantity. I'm more someone who prioritizes, who prioritizes that, I prefer to have a good moment where there's really an exchange, where there's something a bit cool happening than there you go, than indeed, having to do, well doing the marital duty or the quantity, or there you go. It's not... It doesn't interest me anymore, in any case for me. But when I say it's nothing. It's that... It's really not much, there you go. It's still more than someone who is single, but (laughs). And still. When I was single, I think it was more... When I was single I had more than that. But it's just that I take it with humor because it's not a problem actually. Well it's a non-issue for me, and for her who is basically not very into it actually, unlike me who is more liberated - I'm not into it but I'm liberated let's say. And well it's not really her thing basically because indeed also, she didn't really have amazing experiences before and so it has never really been... And then everyone also experiences sensations as they do. There are people who experience sensations more intensely than others, etc. And so there are people who naturally appreciate sensations more. And so... And it's maybe less the case for her so there you go.

Speaker 1 [02:20:00]: It's to put it in relation to satisfaction what you were telling me about it. But I heard what you said. I'll share my screen. There will be a scale and I'll ask you to answer two items on this scale. So. Tell me if you see it correctly.

Speaker 2 [02:20:25]: Yeah.

Speaker 1 [02:20:30]: So in general my partner really listens to me. It ranges from 1 to 9, one being not true at all, three a little true, five moderately true, seven very true and nine completely true. Where would you place yourself?

Speaker 2 [02:20:42]: Well nine.

Speaker 1 [02:20:42]: Nine? So why nine?

Speaker 2 [02:20:49]: Well rather than thinking about the times I can talk to her, I think more about the times I can't talk to her, and I don't really see any times I can't talk to her. After there are moments. Well it's not in terms of... I can always talk to her, after there are moments where it's not necessarily appropriate, but we'll always talk about it a bit, a bit later. And then she will always listen to me if, if, I need to. So....

Speaker 1 [02:21:17]: So why not eight.

Speaker 2 [02:21:26]: Why not nine? No but I don't see, I don't have any particular drawbacks so if I don't have any drawbacks that come to mind. Well why not nine.

Speaker 1 [02:21:46]: My partner is generally attentive to my needs, on the same scale. Where would you place yourself?

Speaker 2 [02:21:55]: Is she attentive to my needs, I'm thinking. Attentive uh... Well the same, nine. That doesn't necessarily mean that. That doesn't necessarily mean that - well I don't know... And again and again. That doesn't necessarily mean she will implement... For example, if we take back, if we take back the sexual act. If I tell her that I want her or something, she can say yes, she can say no you see. So she's attentive. After being attentive doesn't mean... It doesn't mean... Well it doesn't mean giving in, giving in to it. Well there you go. It's not clear. (laughs) But there you go.

Speaker 1 [02:23:01]: So why not eight, for example.

Speaker 2 [02:23:05]: Similarly, I don't really have any drawbacks, I don't really have any drawbacks. We don't have... We don't have... Well on what we discuss, there you go, the fact that I need to have time, etc., she gives me time. But if I want to spend an evening or even the night at a friend's place, or even if I want to go off alone on a bike, sleep in the forest for a week. I know that if I really want to, I can do it and because... It won't be a problem, because she knows she wants the things that are good for me to be done and the things I really want, that I really need to be done, so yeah, nine.

Speaker 1 [02:23:58]: How satisfied are you with your relationship? It ranges from completely dissatisfied, very dissatisfied, rather dissatisfied, uncertain/neutral, rather satisfied, very satisfied and completely satisfied.

Speaker 2 [02:24:10]: Well I would say - I would almost like to put completely satisfied - but because I think it's hard to be completely satisfied with something, let's say very satisfied. Because there can always be little things here and there, but very satisfied.

Speaker 1 [02:24:36]: There you answered a linguistic form, if ever we put the scale in a numerical form, there would be a scale from 0 to 10, zero being not at all satisfied and ten being completely satisfied, where would you place yourself.

Speaker 2 [02:24:48]: Well then I would put like the other one, the notch before completely satisfied so nine.

Speaker 1 [02:24:52]: So why not eight for example.

Speaker 2 [02:24:58]: Well because it's just the notch before. There you go. I was almost at completely satisfied, but it's just the factor of a bit, of reasoning in me that makes me say you can't, you can never be completely satisfied, that there's always, there are always little spoons lying around here and there, things like that. (laughs) So the notch just below completely satisfied, so I would put nine.

Speaker 1 [02:25:22]: Okay. Listen, we are reaching the end of the interview. Is there something you would like to add, correct, specify on the different themes or notions we discussed.

Speaker 2 [02:25:42]: Uh, no. I think that... I think I've talked enough. At the beginning we said it was 1 hour but I think I went on a bit long. It's going to be long for... It's going to be long for, not debriefing, but for transcription. But... No.

Speaker 1 [02:26:00]: You can take the time to think, don't worry about the time.

Speaker 2 [02:26:05]: I don't have anything special that comes to mind, I said what I had to say. I've talked a lot about lots of things. No worries.

Speaker 1 [02:26:15]: Okay, in that case I'll stop the recording.
